Dedication

*In memory of the many hours we've spent
In work and fun, and toil and merriment;
In gratitude for every generous right
That Central held for us, for the delight
Her beauty gave us, and the pride we've known
In every sloping terrace, ivy'd stone,
Her gracious walls abreast our sky-tipped hill,
And summits rising high; but, greater still,
In love of Central's spirit that has made
Her building stand for honor, firmly laid
On steadfast base of loyalty and truth:
Do we, rememb'ring days so dear to youth
And loving every well-known, treasured nook,
To Central's spirit dedicate this book.*

—Gwendolyn Norton.

Foreword

HIS year marks the beginning of the second decade in the life of New Central, and it seems a fitting time to stop a bit in the mad rush of modern times, and to look back over the past ten years.

The class of 1916-17 was the first to enter the great, new building "on the top of the hill"; the boys and girls who first passed through our shining corridors still remember their appreciation of the grateful change from the small "O Street" building to the spacious, modern one just completed.

The class of 1926-27 has never had to attend any school other than the new Central; but that fact should not detract from the realization of the opportunity that our school affords. We students may protest against the few rules made for us; we may chafe a little under the conditions that make "skipping" dangerous and leaving school early, impossible; we may sometimes grumble about teachers who give us our just desserts. Alas, we do—just like other high school students the world over.

Beneath the surface, however, the wearers of flapper togs and the exponents of the twelve-inch-cuffed trousers realize, and are grateful for the advantages of Central. For an understanding principal and two of the finest assistant principals in the country, for a faculty body composed of the best teachers—and friends—to be had; for those all Centralites are thankful. One asset, however, too often is neglected, or forgotten, or merely taken for granted: the building itself and the man who made its existence possible.

Unfortunately, we members of the present classes were not given the opportunity to know Mr. Emory Wilson; he is but a tradition, and, to most students, a vague memory of one of the greatest principals a school has ever had. However, to those who knew him, his name is linked forever with the attainment of the new Central.

It is a stronger memory of him, a keener realization of his sacrifices and struggles to give us a great school, and a deeper appreciation of his work that this issue of the BRECKY has tried to give—and the greatest monument of all, the building for which he virtually gave his life, is the theme of this book.

Your building! In Washington the word Central is a symbol of the finest of schools, the best of equipment, the greatest of opportunities. The 1927 BRECKY is a lasting tribute to the "beauty spots" of the school; in it are reproductions of the places that have lifted our building above the level of other schools. The sloping terraces, the envied stadium, the huge auditorium, the laboratories, the spacious corridors, the vast stage, the beautiful Morgan Memorial Room—these and many other possessions of which Central is justly proud have been caught by the camera for the boys and girls who have enjoyed them.

In the compiling of this Souvenir Edition of our yearbook, the faculty committee and many students have worked faithfully and enthusiastically. Mr. Rathbun's architectural drawing class has contributed the beautiful drawings of the building; the photographs and color plate have been made possible through the enterprising zeal of an alert advertising staff, under Mr. Ray's direction. The special articles, featuring in a unique way the parts of the building most familiar to Centralites are the work of the largest literary staff the BRECKY has ever had, guided by Miss Orr, to whom the standard success of the BRECKY since 1917 has been due. The entire production has been inspired and guided by the earnest wish of many workers to give, not only to the graduating classes, but to the whole school, an annual that will be a monument to New Central itself, a monument dedicated to the memory of a great man.

The BRECKY Staff has realized, moreover, that a building alone can not make a school; and, certainly, ours is one that abounds in that element so essential to any successful body—spirit. Thus, while the building itself is featured, the production is dedicated to Central's spirit of loyalty, cooperation, and honor—that spirit which has made her classrooms and recreation grounds the fields of achievement and good sportsmanship.

And if someday, many years from now, when our school boys are professional men with the responsibilities of business and families; when our bobbed-haired girls are women with careers or homes of their own—if someday, then, those ex-graduates of Central happen to turn through the pages of this book and murmur proudly and a little wistfully, "Ah, that was a school!"—the 1927 BRECKY Staff will have succeeded in its purpose.

Greeting

S THE experiences of school life pass into memories, this souvenir of former days should serve to vivify those memories and, to rekindle that spirit of the old school which challenged you for your best efforts and finest accomplishments. This book will help to cherish fondest friendships of a happy age, and to recall the beautiful environment where many, many happy hours of association and labor were spent. Age gives perspective to life, and as the days go by, the perplexities of school life will become insignificant when compared with achievement both in actual performance, and in ambition aroused and ideals established.

It is my sincere hope that this book will ever be a source of inspiration to all who have come to possess it as members of the classes of 1927, and as they muse over the past, that they will feel the supreme satisfaction of having accomplished the ambitions of the days this book recalls, and of having lived up to the ideals taught them by the institution it represents.

The motto of old Central, "Tenax Propositi" will serve well as a motto for life, and adherence to it marks the true Centralite.

My best wishes go to every member of this year's class for a life of happiness and success, and a reputation which will build higher the reputation of old Central.

A. W. MILLER.

To the Graduates of 1927

WHEN you return to us in future years as old graduates, you may wonder, as other alumni do, if the spirit of the school has not lost an indefinable quality—if it is not somehow different from your recollection of it in 1927. A very definite answer to such a question is given by a glance at old files of the school publications where student life and interests are reflected so accurately. The paragraphs in the REVIEW of twenty years ago devoted to the opening of the football season might have been used in this year's magazine, and the discussion of the military situation and the approaching drill expresses our own thoughts and feelings at a corresponding time this spring. In the old school or in the new one—whatever differences in outward-seeming, traditions persist, memories endure, to the honor of a great school, an old school, a school with a history. To the company of its alumni we old graduates give you girls and boys of 1927 a hearty welcome.

HELEN M. COOLIDGE.

To the Graduates of 1927

ICAN address no general greetings to a group so large as this year's graduates constitute. My mind begins promptly to function as a kaleidoscope and any conception of a class at which nice sentiments might be suitably projected breaks up into shifting memories of individuals who join together as little groups and as rapidly fade away, with marked personal characteristics and accomplishments serving as the bright spots. We in the office know so little of you in the class-room, but we can speak with authority, however, of many of you when service, reliability, and individuality are concerned. We remember you dancing in the Armory, receiving honors for yourself and the school, rushing into Chapel, laboriously demonstrating that whereas punctuality is a cardinal virtue, any undue insistence by us on your own habits of unpunctuality is hardly sporting—and the kaleidoscope keeps on turning.

We are proud of you. We dislike to have you leave. We hope nothing so much as that the word that comes to us of you after your leaving will make that pride increase. Much luck to you!

Miss Miladofsky was one of those favored mortals who really live. Her physical and mental strength enabled her to throw herself heart and soul into whatever she undertook and to accept life joyously and fearlessly as it came. She considered herself singularly fortunate in having always lived alone, for this freedom had given mind and soul a chance to develop naturally. Indeed she always seemed closely akin to the untamed things among which she loved to dwell. Still better, she said, her solitary life had brought one supreme blessing, time and opportunity to think, and with it, the special gift which solitude has to bestow, spiritual insight and power. It was my great privilege to watch this strong soul mellow and sweeten under the stress of this spiritual urge.

The interior panel, from the frieze over the front entrance, is the figure of history for which Mr. Emory M. Wilson posed.
The frame is from the new library woodwork which was his last suggestion for the building.

EMORY M. WILSON
Principal of Central

1902—1920

Memoria Teneamus

MANY stirring tales of heroism excite us in our youth; pictures of bravery, clear vision, and dauntless perseverance fill our minds with the glow of admiration and the wish to simulate the courage of great deeds. All of us have been held enthralled in some pictured book that told the story of a hero: from Jack-the-Giant-Killer through Robin Hood to Cyrano de Bergerac, we have worshipped fiction heroes for their brave hearts, courageous battles, and mighty triumphs in achievement.

Thus in the land of books and make-believe we have often paid tribute to the greatness of a character; and, yet, in our own vital world, we are often blind to the heroism of one in our midst, and too often heedless to a true tale of bravery that rings about us. There are many stories of great lives whose efforts and accomplishments are far nobler and far braver than those of fiction: and such is the story of Emory M. Wilson. Because it tells of a great life, inspiring in its achievement, and because it vitally concerns Central, both the building and its spirit, it is a story that every Centralite should know and cherish.

We are all very proud of our great building on its beautiful hill, overlooking all of Washington. We have loved the beauty of the green terraces, the spacious grounds. We have enjoyed the vast stadium which would make any college proud, the stage, the auditorium, the laboratories, the workshops, the library, the wide corridors, the bright, sunny classrooms. We have a modern school of unusual beauty and splendid equipment, and every discerning student is justly proud. In the busy life of our four-years' sojourn, however, the building is often taken as a matter of course; and too often the appreciation of the man who gave it to us and future Centralites is forgotten.

Mr. Wilson was once a Central boy; he was a member of the class of 1889—perhaps our Central spirit had something to do with the life of achievement which started with an active high school career. When he graduated he won the competitive scholarship to Cornell, and after obtaining his degree and teaching at Ithaca for a year he returned to Washington as a teacher of history at Eastern. Then, in 1897, Central was very fortunate in gaining him on the faculty. He soon became head of the History Department, and his exceptional work and ability were recognized in 1902 when he became principal.

From that time Mr. Wilson devoted his time, his work, and even—at the end—his life in the interest of Central. Our school then was a small building on "O" Street; the only point of resemblance to our new school was its spirit, which has always been the same. Who knows but that it was the need of a building to match the spirit that first gave to Mr. Wilson his dream? For a dream it was—his dream: the vision of a new and spacious building, and it was toward the fulfillment of it that he worked until the end of his life. He spent hours—days, even—at the Capitol, working with others to have Congress pass the appropriation bill for the building. And after the money was secured, Mr. Wilson personally planned the construction of many of the lovely parts that we enjoy today. Nothing was too small for his interest; nothing was too large for him to undertake.

Time and strength, however, are no adequate measure of what he did for Central. His life as principal was an inspiration for every boy and girl who knew him. He possessed that remarkable faculty of being close to personal interests; there were few pupils, even in so large a school, who did not feel the direct impress of his personality. Mr. Wilson was a true leader, a true teacher of youth. He understood boys and girls; he was interested in them, and he loved them. Nothing can show his attitude toward his students better than his greetings to the Class of 1916.

"To say a word of farewell to the Class of 1916 is so much like saying good-bye to the old school that a feeling of sadness, always felt at parting, becomes now most dominant. This seems not the casual good-bye of associates of four hurried years, but the last farewell of friends of a lifetime.

"I do not know whether to pity or to congratulate you. You will never know the joy of the new school, but you have known all the glory of the old. The memories of more than a third of a century are yours—the achievements of the splendid army of girls and boys who have made Central's history are your heritage.

"And so it does not seem the time for words—just a handclasp and a high resolve that we will keep hallowed the best traditions of old Central and, if a lump comes to our throats and a tear to our eyes, we at least will understand."

From this message it is easy to understand that the girls and boys loved "Ep," as he was affectionately called—how they loved him! And the qualities of greatness that Mr. Wilson personified drew respect and admiration from all of his associates. In the Memorial Issue of the Brecky, Miss Orr expressed the feeling of the men and women who had worked with him, in a little poem that speaks eloquently of a great soul:

A judgment ever swift, and sound, and keen;
Deep sympathies—an understanding heart;
Humor that set a-glow the day's routine;
Vision, to fit each narrow, petty part
Into a rounded, satisfying whole;
Courage to fight, and courage to endure—
A leader, with a great and kindly soul;
An influence lasting, purposeful, and pure.

It was these qualities that an entire school loved, admired, and respected; and in 1920, after he had lived to witness the graduation of three classes from the new school, the death of Mr. Wilson, as a result of overwork and strain, closed the story of a great life; its memory, however, could not be dimmed. His spirit of service, his gift of vision, and his courage will be remembered as long as Central stands.

It is impossible to be grateful for our building without feeling a deep sense of appreciation for the work of Mr. Wilson. Our school could not have materialized had it not been for its conception in the mind of its founder. Every corner of the building bears mute testimony of the influence of the man who first saw in it his dreams realized. From the corner-stone by the front entrance to the Memorial Tablet in the stadium, the name of Mr. Wilson is firmly wrought into its structure.

To him we owe in a large measure our Central; to him we owe the pride in a beautiful building, and the privilege of attending a school that is famed for its advantages; to him we owe the enhanced quality that his life gave to Central spirit, and the lesson that a sacrificing, inspiring life has taught us; and to his memory let us pay a tribute of appreciation for the fulfillment of a dream that has meant, and means, and shall mean happiness and pride for Centrals' boys and girls.

The Building Speaks

The Library

I AM the Library of Central High School, and in the midst of so many school activities and under the sound of so many voices, I plead for a brief space that you "lend me your ears." I would address my remarks to the seniors of 1927. As compared with the great libraries of the world, I am small. I trust, though, that it is a pardonable pride when I say that what I lack in size I make up in quality. You will find on my shelves books of every kind and description. I boast of my works of Scott, Shakespeare, Longfellow, and a host of others, in the same way that the libraries of the great universities of the world are inspired to boast. To my friends, the seniors, let me say that I stand ready to assist you. Would you know and appreciate drama? Spend a while with my Shakespeare and Marlowe. Would you know the great events of the world, and of your own country? Turn to the pages of Bassett or Hazen. Would you see and read the great masterpieces of fiction? Read my Dickens or Victor Hugo. I would have you seniors come to me in examining my books in somewhat the same spirit that inspired the great Robert Southey in his library to exclaim:

"My days among the dead are past.
Around me I behold,
Wherever these casual eyes are cast,
The mighty minds of old."

There is a personal touch. I feel deeply, you know; I am the assembly place, the "study hall" of the seniors. Seeing you every day, I have learned to know you quite intimately. I have heard your teachers reprimand you, and demand that you cease chatting with your neighbor. I have watched you studying, and I have watched you not studying.

But it is not just for a study hall that I am used. Other great events take place within my walls. Every spring I witness a large banquet which is held for those who have labored so hard for you throughout the year. I refer to the Publications Banquet. Oh, what a grand time those editors and their staffs have! They are entertained by many sketches, plays, and toasts. This event strikes the keynote of all the work of publications in the year.

There is another occurrence which is even more important than the Publications Banquet. Have you ever been with me on a warm night in June when I am the center, a chief attraction of so many groups of joyful people? Can you imagine what this is? Why, it is the Senior Prom. Oh, how delightfully those young people work to decorate me for this great event! From the lights which are suspended from the ceiling hang variegated festoons which blend in with the dresses of the young girls. Everything and everyone is in gala array, and oh, what a sight it all is. I feel fully repaid for the ordeal of being so decorated when I can look out on such an assemblage as this.

In all these years I have become familiar with the many famous and interesting sayings of those who have attempted to keep order in this room. I have heard such words as these: "Stop talking—or five pages." "Will Mr. Brown, or whatever his name may be, please report to the desk?" "Now that conversation will just have to be discontinued." Oh, how I enjoy the fun of it all!

Now I will come to the point which is dear to my heart. Have you heard the good news? I know that each one of you has, at some time or other, gazed at the pictures around my walls. You have all probably wondered when they would be finished. Well,

The Armory

 THE Armory, during the day, is no place for a lady. On those happy Friday and Saturday nights when couples whirl and waltz within its flag-draped walls, girls are not only welcome but essential. On school days, however, it's a different matter. The guns that seem so harmless at night under gay lights take on a very menacing aspect in the daylight. The Armory itself looks huge and threatening toward any member of the weaker sex. The bunting flags stir coldly and seem to say, "Please remove yourselves. These are gentlemen's quarters." And, most of all, the inhabitants of the Armory are not eager to encourage any visits from girls. Boys, boys, boys—and uniforms and guns. In the officers' lounge, officers lounge and talk of subjects military and otherwise. In the Armory, privates of all sizes clean guns and talk about their superiors. The whole atmosphere of the place—coatless boys and polished sabers, and caps with gold braid, and dirty guns, and grease rags—is all quite masculine, and very military, and no place for a girl at all. I know—from experience. For Miss Orr looked at me one day and said, "Gwen, you're not doing enough. I want you to go downstairs and interview the Armory."

Very blithely and all unsuspecting, I went with my little notebook and pencil. I trotted gaily down the steps past the Boys' Gym, down the steps to the Armory. I breezed into the officers' lounge and—stopped. Ordinarily I am not nonplused by any boy or boys, but there was something about a group of arguing officers that reminded me of a charge; my knees did not tremble, but they weakened. The tall captain of Company A looked at me and stopped playing with his sword. "What," he said in the tone he must use with his rear-rank privates, "do you want." And, not being a rear-rank private, I fled.

After several futile attempts to find the Armory empty, I finally managed to get excused from chapel one day. With a sigh of gratitude, I saw that no officers were lounging and no privates cleaning. The vast Armory was alone; its polished floor was empty; its cases of guns flanked the wall in endless lines. The huge flags hung motionless over the great seals painted on the walls. I tiptoed to the center of this immense room. There, in the stillness of empty spaciousness, I ventured timidly.

"Please, Armory, Miss Orr wants an interview. Tell me something." My voice sounded like a squeak in the quiet.

"Please," I ventured again. Silence was my only reward. Then, knowing the Armory has a masculine soul, I began to cry. Very reproachfully I sniffled and sobbed there in the midst of the flags and guns.

"Oh, well," boomed a deep, gruff voice, "stop crying and I'll talk. But stop sniffling at once! I can stand anything but that. Stop it!" The deep voice showed me the kind of Armory I had to deal with. I stopped and waited.

"Well, what do you want?" the words boomed out impatiently. "I hate talking. Bad business."

I began to feel discouraged, but I have Scotch blood in my make-up.

"Oh, sir," I wheedled, "tell me about the things you've seen and heard during the ten years you've lived at our school."

"Ma'am," the reply was polite but firm, "it is the Army's code never to betray one's fellow soldier."

"Mercy," I gasped, "I'm not asking you to betray anyone. I merely want to hear your ideas on—on—" I floundered, but went on, "cadets, or dances, or boys, or—"

"Oh, boys—well, well, that's different." The gruff voice brightened. Ah—I had hit upon his weakness!

"Boys are wonderful to watch. I see them come in here, little rookies who

The Stage

Dramatist Personae

THE STAGE.....
THE ORGAN.....	An awkward, lovable old fellow
FIRST ORCHESTRA CHAIR.....	An extremely musical person
SECOND ORCHESTRA CHAIR.....	A disagreeable creature
	A colorless personality

Scene: The Central High School Auditorium about 6.30 on the evening of June 22, 1927.

Stage: Another class is leaving us tonight. Alack! Alas!

Organ: Yes. Just think, the little "rookies" whom we welcomed in 1923 are graduating.

Stage: "Parting is such sweet sorrow."

Organ: What are you quoting now?

Stage: Why, my dear ignoramus, that is from "Romeo and Juliet." Don't you remember the beautiful balcony scene in which——

Organ: (Quickly) Yes, yes; of course; but you were speaking of the June class.

Stage: I do hate to see them go. I have so many friends among them.

1st Orchestra Chair: (disagreeably) You say that every year.

Stage: But this year it's especially true. Why, we've had such bully good times together. When they were "rookies" they all came to see my "Trelawney of the Wells."

Organ: That was a beautiful play—so full of mellow notes and tones.

1st O. C.: You would describe it in musical terms. I suppose it sent little "trills" up and down your pipes, or "whatever you call 'em."

2d O. C.: I'll never forget how insulted I was when Sir William said, "Have we no cheers here? Do we lack cheers?"

Stage: My favorite line was "Let us, oh, my dears, let us go on with the rehearsal." You should have heard Bill Bradley and Vinton Hayworth say that.
(There is silence while the stage dreams of his past.)

1st O. C. (to 2d O. C.): He's a romantic old fool. He hasn't any good red blood in him.

Stage: (Who has overheard) Oh! Hasn't he? How about "Stop Thief!" I certainly did wake Central up with that.

Organ: (Confidentially) The reverberations of those shouts flattened my "A" a little bit.

1st O. C.: Getting musical again, aren't you? You're a "Bach" number! Ha, ha!

2d O. C.: (To 1st O. C., who is still laughing) You certainly think you're sharp, don't you?

Stage: (To Organ) Remember the minister and the bride? By the way, one of the boys who played the detective is graduating tonight.

Organ: Do you know any more of these lofty, full-blown seniors?

1st O. C.: Idiot! Full grown, not full blown. You ought to use notes when you talk.

2d O. C.: He does.

1st O. C.: Well, it isn't noticeable.

Stage: (To First O. C.) You should be entirely cut out of the scene. You are too frivolous for Central. (To Organ) Oh! yes. I met a good many in our mammoth production of last year. We had quite a time managing the Cat and Dog, and (chuckling) oh, how poor Fire ran away from Water. I was mighty proud of the "Bluebird."

Organ: And rightly so, too.

Stage: I made a number of friends in the Vaudeville and in the "New Poor" last Christmas.

2d O. C.: You must work awfully hard.

Room 104

YOU want to interview me? Hm-m. Of course, I realize my place in this building. Not that I take any credit upon myself—but if I do say it, I have had some of the most interesting inhabitants in Central. And I wish you could hear some of the original excuses that are brought—what? Oh, my history. Well, for years I was a classroom; then when it was decided to have two assistant principals, the desks were taken out and later my two cubby holes were built in. Miss Coolidge moved into the left-hand one and is still there, handling protesting students, complaining teachers, and indignant parents in her own quiet and firm way. Mr. Miller occupied the other cubby hole until one day I saw him pass through my right-hand door to the principal's office. Then Mr. Nelson sailed into the room at 40 miles an hour, opened both the windows, rolled up his sleeves, and began work before the astonished clock could tick. Let's see now. That's the Brecky corner. The business-like little woman is Miss Orr. From October to June I see her hurrying and worrying over that BRECKY. The noisy crowd beside her is the BRECKY Staff, checking, rechecking, and re-rechecking lists of names. At the table, girls go over the music attendance slips, and I wish you could hear the original excuses they have, too—what? — Oh, my typical working day. — At the right you behold the mourner's bench. Here we have a boy who has been summoned, two girls who want their programs changed, a weeping rookie who has lost her coat, and two boys who have been "sent to the office." Here comes Mr. Nelson. Just listen:

"Come in here. I sent for you to change back this program."

"But—"

"You didn't give me all the facts when you asked for this change."

"But—"

"Here, have your section teacher sign this, and take this to your English teacher. Tomorrow, report to English the first hour. Now, you two girls, what do you want this time?"

"Same thing. You see, we knew you were awfully rushed the first time we asked, and, of course, we know how it is with everyone in the school wanting his program changed, and we'd heard about how considerate you are, and if we have to take it the third hour we can't take drama; and, of course, everyone knows you're so nice about thinking of the other person's side and we thought—"

"Wait, I surrender. Give me your programs, then give me a rest."

* * * * *

"Oh, Miss Coolidge, I've been waiting and waiting for you. My c-c-coat's gone. And I just know it's been stolen. And it's awful c-cold out. I don't know what my mother'll say. I know it was in my locker when I went to lunch because—"

"Did you have a padlock on your locker?"

"Of course I did, but some one—"

"Was it locked tight?"

"Well, sometimes it's closed and isn't really locked, but I don't think—"

"If you'll tell Miss Stephens the number of your locker, she'll give you your coat. Tomorrow have a new lock. The school feels that it is responsible—"

"Oh, is it really safe? Gee, thanks."

"So you two boys were sent here by your history teacher. What have you been doing?"

"Well, it's not so much what we have been doing as what we haven't. You see—"

"A poor excuse! Now, in my day—how I wish you could have heard some of the original excuses they used to—Oh, good-by."

W. LOIS HALL

The Publications Office

During my long and hectic existence I have seen many queer sights and heard many queer tales. Many famous students have crossed my floor. I will try to tell you of a typical day, such as might have happened any Friday, one of the Bulletin copy days, of this past year.

"Bulletin Copy Day"

A Drama in One Act

Scene I

Characters: The Publications Staff

Time: Any Friday.

Fateful Friday is the day
When, despairingly, we say,
"Oh, where's that story and headline?
Everything there for the printers?
That's fine."

Scene: Publications' office, 321A, Central High School.

(The door opens; the jabber of ten falsettos and ten basses suddenly stops as each and every one cranes his or her neck to observe the intruder, who looks around fearfully, for he is a reporter. He enters.)

The Ed: Ah! There you are! Have you got that story?

(She says this in a stern voice.)

Reporter (timidly): No, ma'am; Miss —— wouldn't give me anything. I——
The Ed: I——

(Her voice is lost as the staff returns to its work, satisfied that nothing out of the ordinary can be expected. The jabber again rises to great heights.)

Lend me the glue.—Oh, where is my pencil?—Got any more news?—How do you spell this?

(These rise from the long table in the middle of the room where half the staff are seated.)

The Associate Editor (to Sports Writer): Hey, there, come over and rewrite this story.

The Assistant Editor: Where is that interview? Thanks. Six hundred words! That'll have to be cut down.

Special Writer: Give me some paper; here's that story.

The Faculty Adviser (to The Ed): Here are some stories from the journalism classes.

(The Ed glances at the stories, passes the ones destined for the third page to one Associate Editor, and the ones for the second and fourth pages to the other Associate Editor, keeping the first page stories herself.)

The Associate Editor (to Special Writer): I can't use more than two hundred words on this story. Cut it down.

(To Sports Writer): This is terrible; rewrite this story, 250 words.

(To Special Writer): Got that done? All right, write a number three head for it.

The Lunch Room Corridor

The rookie emerged, apple in hand, from the din and clatter of a noisy lunchroom, to the basement corridor. He climbed up on the rail beside the courtyard windows, settled himself comfortably, and proceeded to nibble his apple. People passed by in little groups, but the rookie sat there and munched his fruit. Soon his face broke into a smile, for who should be coming down the hall but Jimmie Smith, the fellow next door. Jimmie was a senior, and the rookie intended to speak to him. Jimmie approached.

"Hello, Jimmie," blurted out the apple eater. The haughty senior batted his eyelashes and paid no attention. Squelched, the poor rookie sank back in the corner and sheepishly proceeded with his apple.

"Hi! Willie." The rookie brightened up. "What did we have in history?" A second freshman climbed up on the rail.

"Next nine pages on Egypt. Didn't you do it?"

"Yeah, just wanted to make sure I was right."

"That Latin was hard, wasn't it?"

"Uh huh."

The conversation lagged. Willie gazed out over the people passing by. Two girls giggled as they passed and were heard to say something about rookies. Willie wiggled his shoulders uncomfortably.

"They think they're something," grumbled his friend. "Wait until I'm a senior."

"There goes Betty-Ann," remarked Willie after another silence. "Golly, isn't she smart?"

"Huh, she ought to be. All she does is study. Why, she does lessons even during section."

"She's right pretty, though."

"Don't sit on the rail, boys," admonished a teacher, swooping down on them with an engaging smile. Willie lazily descended from his perch, gazed longingly at the remains of his apple, threw it in the can, and stuffed his hands down into his pockets.

"Gee! A fellow can't do anything around here. Let's go down to the end of the hall so we can be ready to go upstairs when the bell rings." Sauntering down the corridor, the two rookies were lost in the crowd.

Two seniors in all their majesty ambled down the basement corridor, casting scornful glances at all who were beneath their dignity.

"This place gets worse every year," remarked one. "The rookies keep getting smaller, and there are not half as many pretty girls here this year as last."

"You said it. Betty Ann is the only really pretty girl in the whole class."

"Right. Say, are you going anywhere tonight?"

"Can't; I'm financially embarrassed."

"Ditto, here; what do you say to our celebrating together? It's April Fool's, you know."

"Suits me. What shall we do?"

"I don't know. We can figure that out later."

"Hey there, Will; what did we have in Math?"

"I don't know. I went out last night."

Will joined the pair, and the three strolled on. At the end of the hall they threaded their way through the crowd and walked back. When they came opposite the lunch-room door, Will detached himself from the others.

"See you fellows later. I have to see Betty Ann this period. I'm sorry to have you lose such company," he said.

"Oh, we understand, William. Run along, it's all right. We hope you won't have any competition," laughed the first senior, patting Will on the back. "Poor fellow, Betty Ann has him hooked hard, all right," he resumed when Will was gone. "I don't blame him for being hooked, though."

The Locker Room

He's a gray, lovable old fellow, full of cobwebs and dust. And once you've seen him you can never forget him. He's watched the new "scrubs" come in, and he's seen the old "grads" come back. He clings to you. He wants you to come back, and look him over; perhaps chuckle a bit over the good times you had in school. I often go down and listen to him; he is kind of pathetic, yet always interesting.

Just the other day he said: "I've watched the boys in football, in baseball, track, and basketball, and listened to their hopes, their fears. I've lived their victories with them, suffered their defeats. And I have loved them all for it. Still they go, one by one. Some of them return; others go away, though I never see them again I never forget." Here he stopped to brush away a tear. Suddenly a new sparkle came into his eye. "Guess who was here the other day? Jimmie Lemon and Don Childress. The minute they came in they started to talk about me. 'Well, if the old place hasn't got a new coat of whitewash. Look, Jimmie, here's the old locker I used to have.' They kept this up for a long time, just talking about old experiences and good times."

"How long have you been here?" I asked him.

"I first came here back in 1916. And, would you believe it, but that very year we won the championship of football? Yes, sir; the first time in the new school! They were mighty proud boys that year. And do you remember Jaspar Long? Well, he was captain in 1917, when they won it again."

"How was baseball making out about that time?"

"Fine! Fine! Let's see, now. The year MacDonald was captain they won their first championship; that was in 1917, too. That same year the track team ran off with everything. And 1918 was another banner year for Central; they captured football, baseball, basketball. Also, the swimming team won the South Atlantic Championship. And do you know we held that title for five years? It certainly does me good to prattle this to somebody, every now and then. I hope you're not getting tired?"

"No; go ahead. I don't get a chance to hear this every day of the year. But tell me what happened in 1919."

"The only things we won that year were baseball and swimming. I am not going to tell you about 1920. That was, as you know, the greatest and the saddest year the school had ever known. Every true 'Centralite' knows about that year, so I am not going to repeat it."

"But why do you say sad?"

"Why? My boy, we lost our best and most beloved 'Centralite,' Ep Wilson. I always place him first in my memory, for I'm selfish enough to always connect him with myself. He was with us down here, backing us heart and hand. Perhaps he's just a name to you, who didn't know him? But to me there is something far more. He was a great man, a very great man, and I shall never, never forget him."

"I'm sorry that I brought back such sad memories to you, though it all makes life just a little sweeter to know that there was a man like him in the world."

"You are right; but come, come. I'm losing hold of myself. The next few years were not so successful, and it was not until last year that we really came into ourselves. Let's see—that was "Morty" Wilner's year, wasn't it? There was a mighty fine boy for you. He comes down here ever so often. He is one that doesn't forget me. But why talk of the past? It may have been glorious, but what could be more glorious than our future? Think of what has gone, and then think of what will be. That is the thought that has kept me going these many years. Well, I'm sorry you have to go, sonny. Come down and see me again."

I slowly walked out, closing the door behind me. I left him alone to his memories and cobwebs. Please do not forget him. All of you that do know him go down some time and look him over. You will never regret it. And, oh, how glad he will be to see you. You will know him, for he never changes—this spirit of the locker rooms.

HARRY SHERWOOD.

*And who forgets the sweetness
Of the first spring day of all,
The song of some bold robin,
And the lure of sunlit wall.*

*And who forgets the beauty
When the eager buds unfold,
When Spring flings free her riches
And our hedges turn to gold?*

Last Will and Testament of the February Graduating Class of 1927

WE, the mid-year graduates, being of sound disposing mind, memory, and understanding, considering the certainty of graduation, but the uncertainty of the time thereof, and being desirous to settle our business affairs and thereby be the better prepared to leave this school, do therefore make and publish this our last Will and Testament.

First, we leave to our honorable principals, namely, Mr. Alvin W. Miller, Miss Helen Coolidge, Mr. Norman J. Nelson, our class picture with the instructions that this picture is to be hung in the Central Gallery of Fame, along with the pictures of our championship swimming and basketball teams of years gone by. This picture is a gift and a token of our undying love, a material remembrance of the way we looked at our very worst.

Second, to our beloved faculty, we leave all our "D's," fully realizing the scarcity and value of these articles. They represent to us four years of labor and hardship, of strife and toil, of agony, of our very life's blood. We leave them in your worthy hands for our posterity, with the desire that they be generously distributed.

Third, to the Juniors, who are to succeed us as Seniors, we leave our most famous tardy and absence excuses, to be used upon certain persons in section rooms, and in one other little room especially. These helpful little bits have been compiled in one beautiful volume entitled, "Why Alarms Never Go Off." After years of research and experiment we find these the things that every student should know. They are very original, guaranteed not to be old or time-worn. We hope that they will help you better than they did us.

Fourth, to the sophomores, who are just beginning to realize their own dignity and importance, we leave, for each and every one, a ticket to the vaudeville, a ticket to the Spring Play, an athletic card, and a subscription to the Bulletin and the Review. We wish you to learn and profit by our sad experiences. (How we worked and begged to be allowed these things!) With this equipment you can look any agent in the eye and say, "I have done my duty. Begone!"

Fifth, to the Freshmen, to the Rookies, who are babies and yet not babies, we leave our old brief cases, in a supreme effort to lighten your burden and lift some of the care from your young shoulders. Last of all, we leave to you, who are the young pride of Central, our Central Spirit, tattered and worn, suffering from constant use, yet still strong and trustworthy.

Signed and approved,

FEBRUARY GRADUATES OF 1927.

February Class History

AS WE, the mid-year class of 1927, think back over the four years which we have spent here at Central, certain incidents loom larger in our minds than others. The first, and perhaps the most noteworthy, is the fact that when we entered, except for a hearty speech from Mr. Maurer, we received no welcome from the school. Instead "we softly entered the great portals and silently took our places."

Dimly, in the minds of many, can we picture the night we saw "our" first Spring Play. We remember what a sensation it gave us to know that we were fellow students with those actors and how delighted we were when the critics agreed with us and presented the Dramatic Association with the Brown Cup.

Later in the semester, we participated in the dedication of our stadium to Emory M. Wilson, for many years the principal of Central. Though we never knew Mr. Wilson, we were assured that he had been an all-round Centralite and true friend, and so we went into the ceremony with great zeal.

At the beginning of our second semester, we bade farewell to Mr. Maurer and warmly welcomed Mr. Kramer. During the following year, we were successful both in baseball and, for the first time in six years, in the Competitive Drill.

Our junior year was heralded by the resignation of Mr. Kramer and the selection of Mr. Miller as his successor.

Encouraged by the winning of the football championship in 1925, we began a "Banner Year" for the school. The object was to place Central on a lofty height of achievement, through hard work intermingled with the proper spirit; all this to bring to her glory and high honors.

Inspired by the success of the football team, the basketball team tied with Eastern for the championship. Later in the Competitive Drill, first (1st) and third (3d) places fell to our lot.

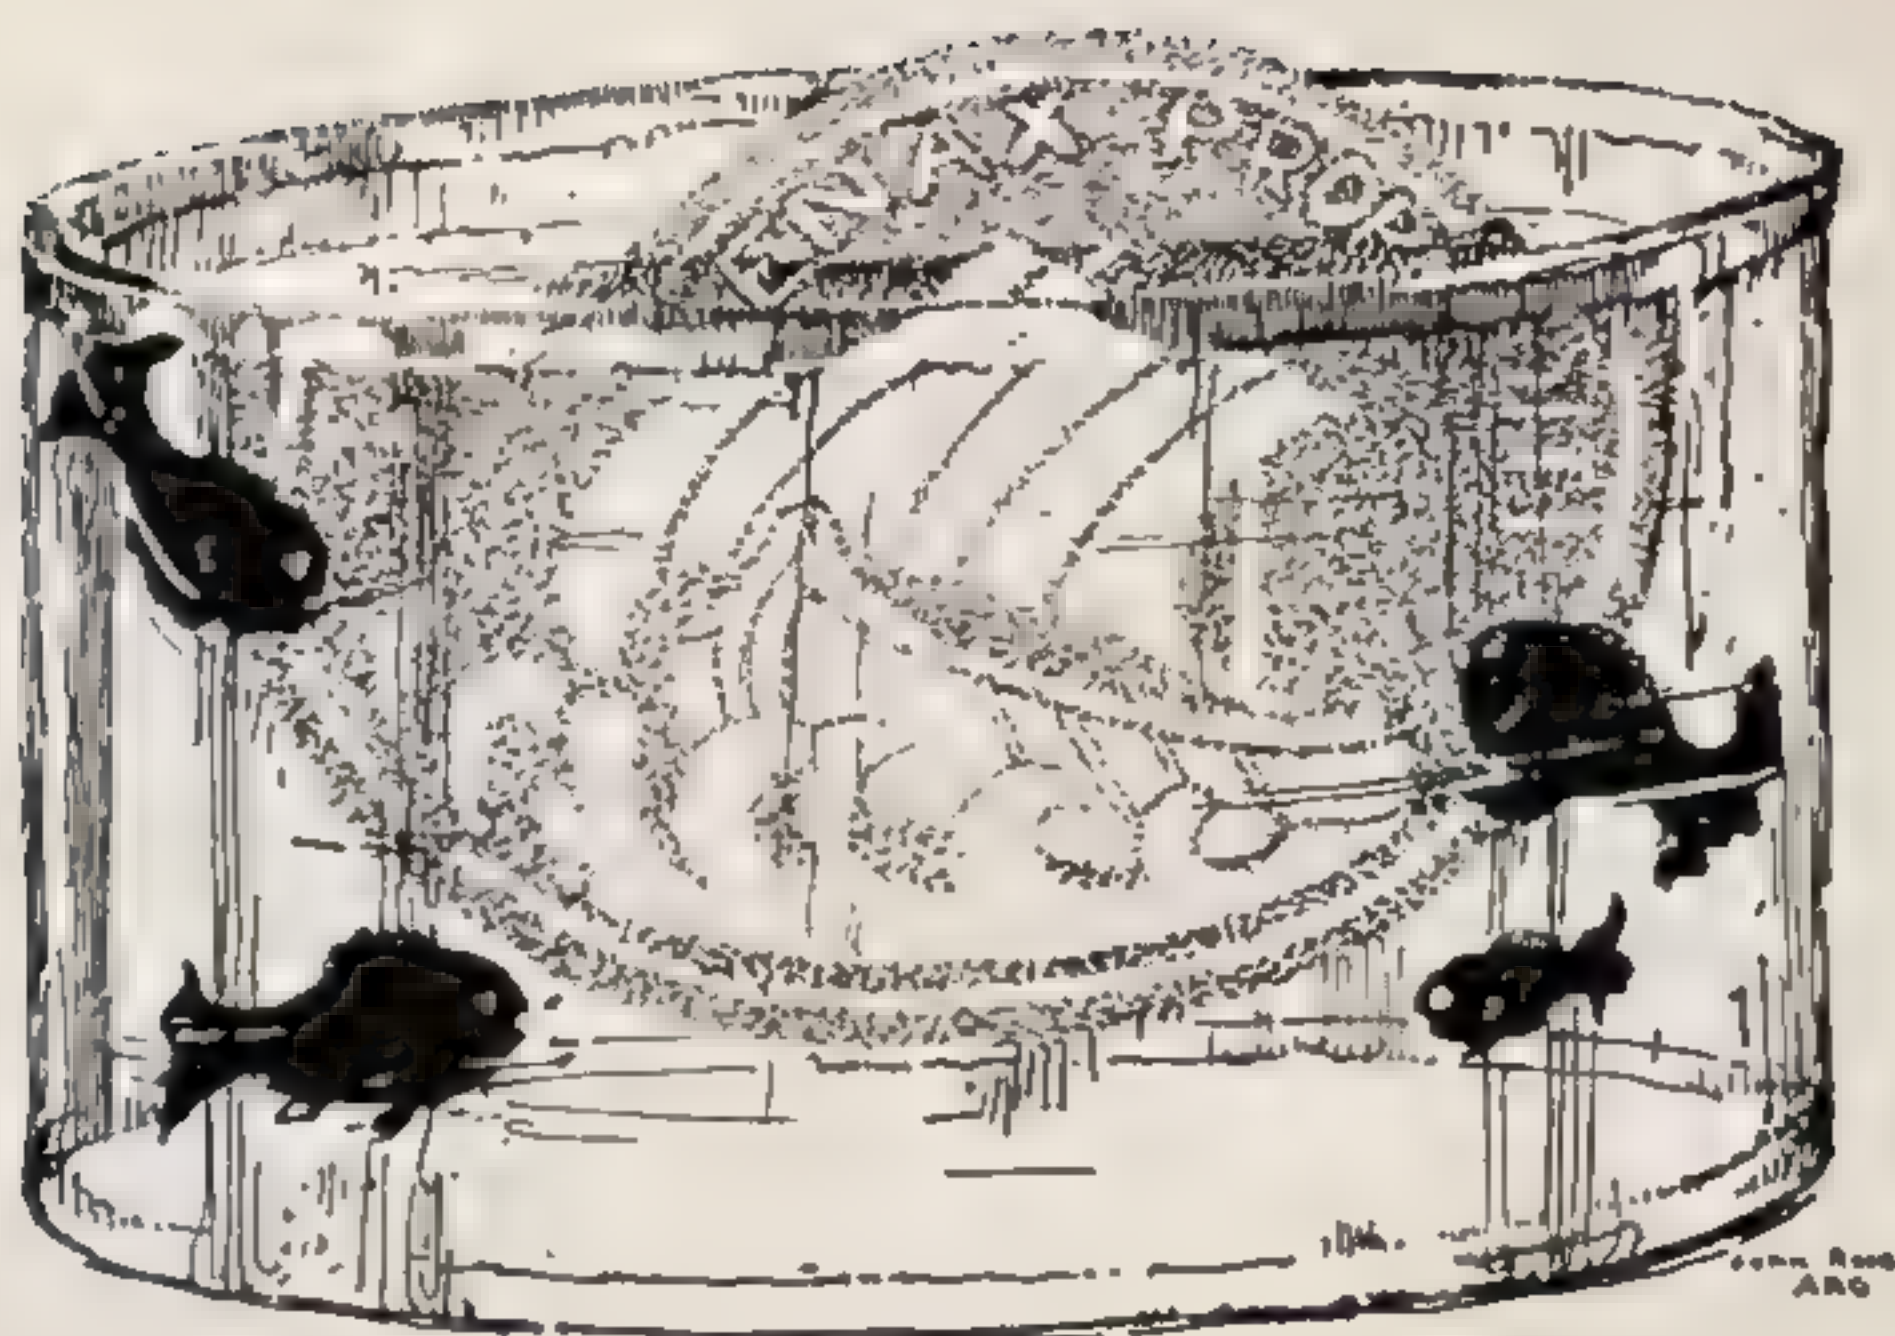

Along scholastic lines, two scholarships from George Washington University, one from Harvard, one from Wesleyan, and one from Swarthmore were presented to Central students at the close of school last June. Honorable mention should also be given to the Dramatic Association for "The Bluebird," the 1926 Spring Play. It was a stupendous undertaking and, though it did not bring us the Brown Cup, we appreciate the effort and regard it as one of Central's masterpieces in drama.

While we are reviewing the accomplishments of the school, we should not fail to take a personal retrospect of the four years which we have so profitably and enjoyably spent here. We have steeped ourselves with memories of the many happy hours spent in joyous and carefree camaraderie, and tonight, as we realize that the class meets only once more in a body, a sudden fear and apprehension for the future steal over us as we leave these "happy hunting grounds."

So, as we are about to attain the goal for which we have striven these four years, we wish to throw our torch to the undergraduates.

"Be theirs to hold it high!"

February Valedictory

VALE! Farewell! Our port of dreams calls; the struggle for attainment has already begun, but wherever we may be blown about on the high seas of adventure, one common bond is ours—our Alma Mater.

Central has truly been a cherishing mother; her democratic spirit has become ours. No longer do we look upon her as a stranger. Now, she is an understanding friend, our helpmate in all our endeavors, a solid background in all our troubles, for, "Did she not magnify our minds, show clear just what it all meant?" Do we not understand much that was a mystery before? Are we not now better prepared to fathom Life's greater mysteries?

We have finished. But Central is not sending us away coldly. We are not leaving with a sense of relief that it is all over. We go to gain greater glories, not in the conceit of our own knowledge, but with a love and admiration for Central and what she has done for us. Our honors are her honors, our fame hers—

"All our reserves must be utilized, all our powers concentrated and wisely directed toward the accomplishment of the work we have marked out for ourselves." Whatever that work may be, it will express our individuality; it will show our fellow-men our views of life, our high standards, and our striving for betterment. But this work can never be a success unless we take into consideration the "Other fellow," and learn to appreciate his struggles, his needs, and his viewpoints, which are all so indissolubly linked with ours. All the world loves a winner; we have aimed high, but the courage of our convictions and the enthusiasm of youth will carry us over the top to the greater prizes in store.

These have been years of preparation, in which we have sown the seeds of knowledge. An artist never makes a stroke without first having in his mind's eye the finished picture. A railroad is never built without its exact route being known. Nothing above the commonplace can be done without plan and preparation, for the world is demanding more than ever before, men, trained to be leaders, who have the education and broad culture essential to success. To Central and her loyal teachers, who first inspired in us the desire to do something worth while, we are forever indebted.

The coming years will bring the harvest.

So onward, still onward to the higher calling, making a constant herculean effort to keep growing, letting no day pass which will not find us a little larger, a little wiser, a little better.

LUCILLE B. TERRY.

Mrs. Irene Ottilie Young

AN APPRECIATION

"A little bit of Heaven" dropped out of the sky and settled in Room 218. There is stationed a cozy home with that all-pervading friendly atmosphere. A kind and watchful mother guards a huge flock in this curiously misplaced home in the stern recesses of Central High School.

Who fulfills this difficult task of mothering about one hundred and fifty chicks? It is none other than the much-loved friend of all Centralites, Mrs. Ottilie Young, who has been one of our history, civics, and economics teachers. Her whole life has been spent taking care of her brood.

When most of the world is just rising, about seven o'clock, she is on duty in her room here to give what aid she can to the students. Her large supply of helpful books has been open to anyone to read in her cozy nook. One would be surprised to know the number of students who have relinquished a warm bed for

Mrs. Young's room in the early morning.

It was in September, 1916, when our new Central was opened to students, that Mrs. Young joined the ranks of the faculty body. Our gain was Western's loss, for Mrs. Young had been a teacher at Western since February, 1895.

Possessing unusual qualities and methods, Mrs. Young has been an outstanding character at Central High School. Her ambition and aim has not been to produce so many human machines, by having her classes memorize, for instance, page 131 in Muzzy's American History, but by springing questions not in the books, she has endeavored to develop the brain power of her students and to help them reason out ordinary every-day questions connected with the subjects.

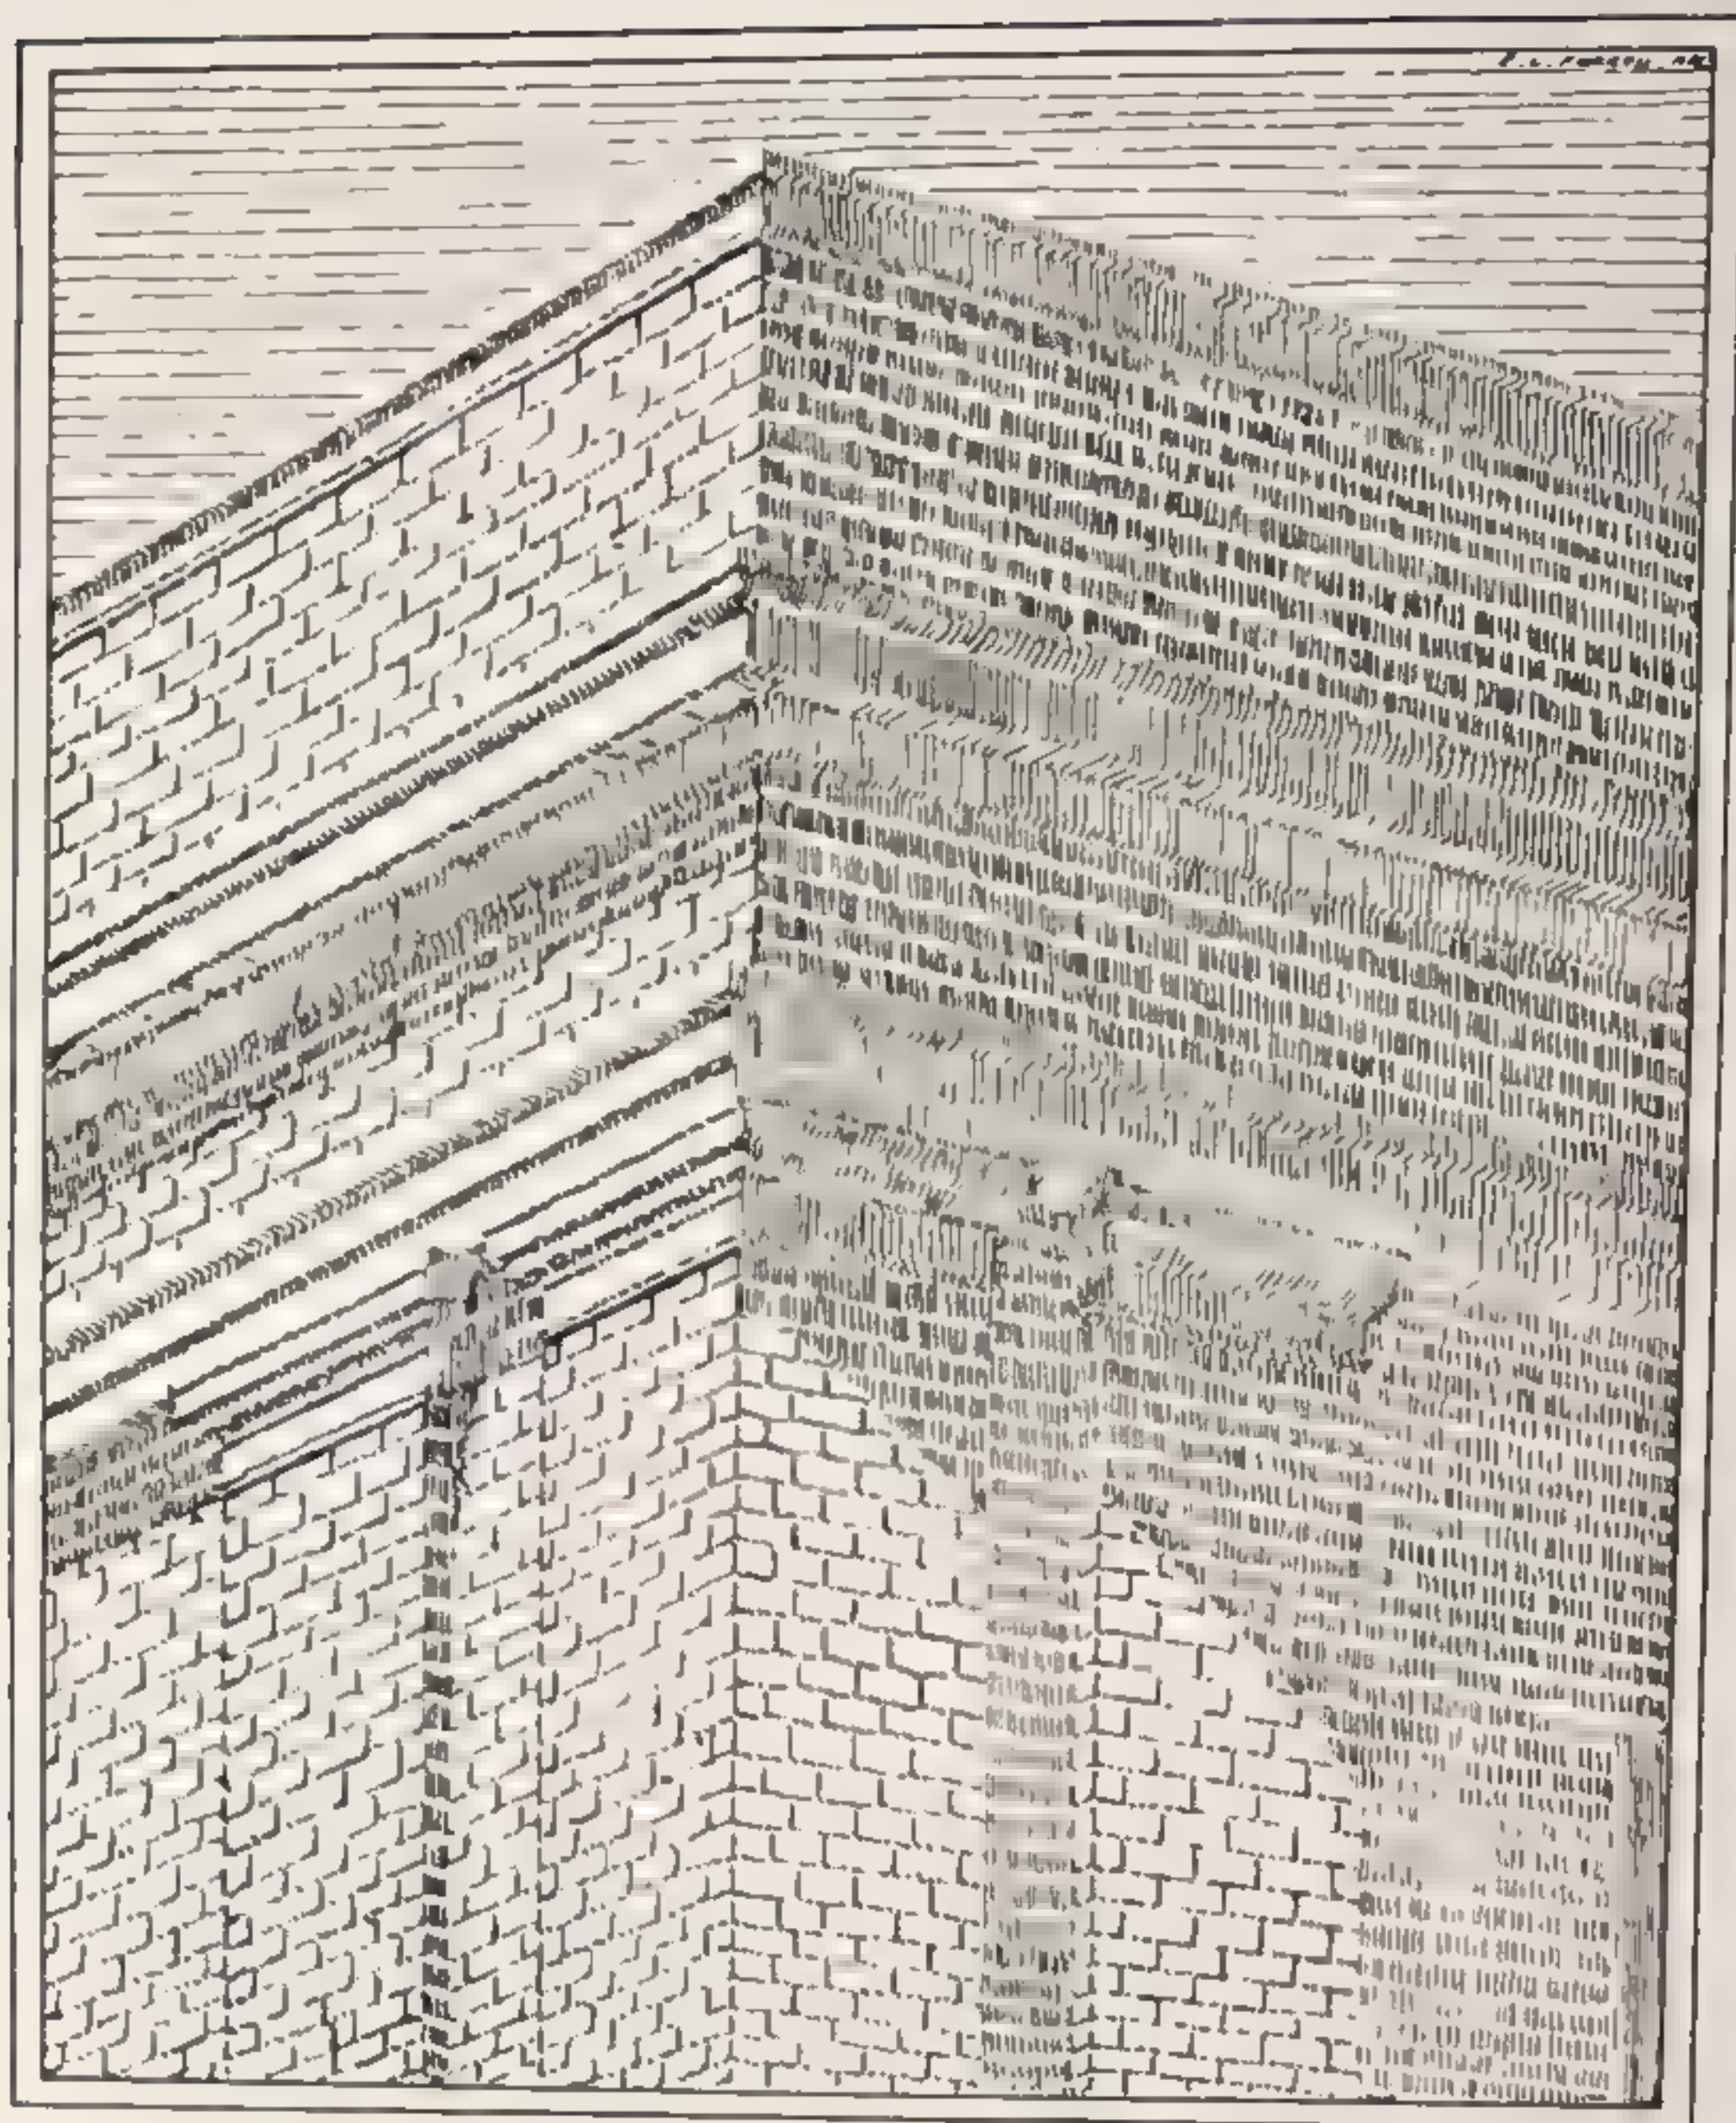

It has been said that Mrs. Young's classroom has been the home of the orators. It is true that excellent practice in this line has been available to all of Mrs. Young's large family. Every person who has a single word to say in any of her classes must go to the front of the room to speak; furthermore, once a week her classes give talks on current topics. These talks are given without notes, and in time everyone is able to speak fluently. On current topic days, parliamentary procedure is used.

High trust is placed by Mrs. Young in her students, because she is one of the few teachers who uses the honor system. Her pupils are permitted to correct their own test papers. This method has proved a very successful one in Mrs. Young's classes, and has been found an important factor in developing character.

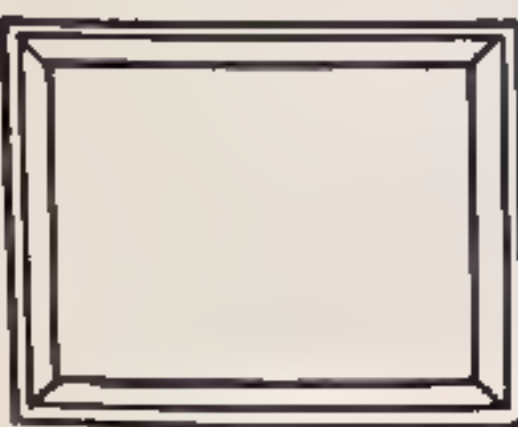

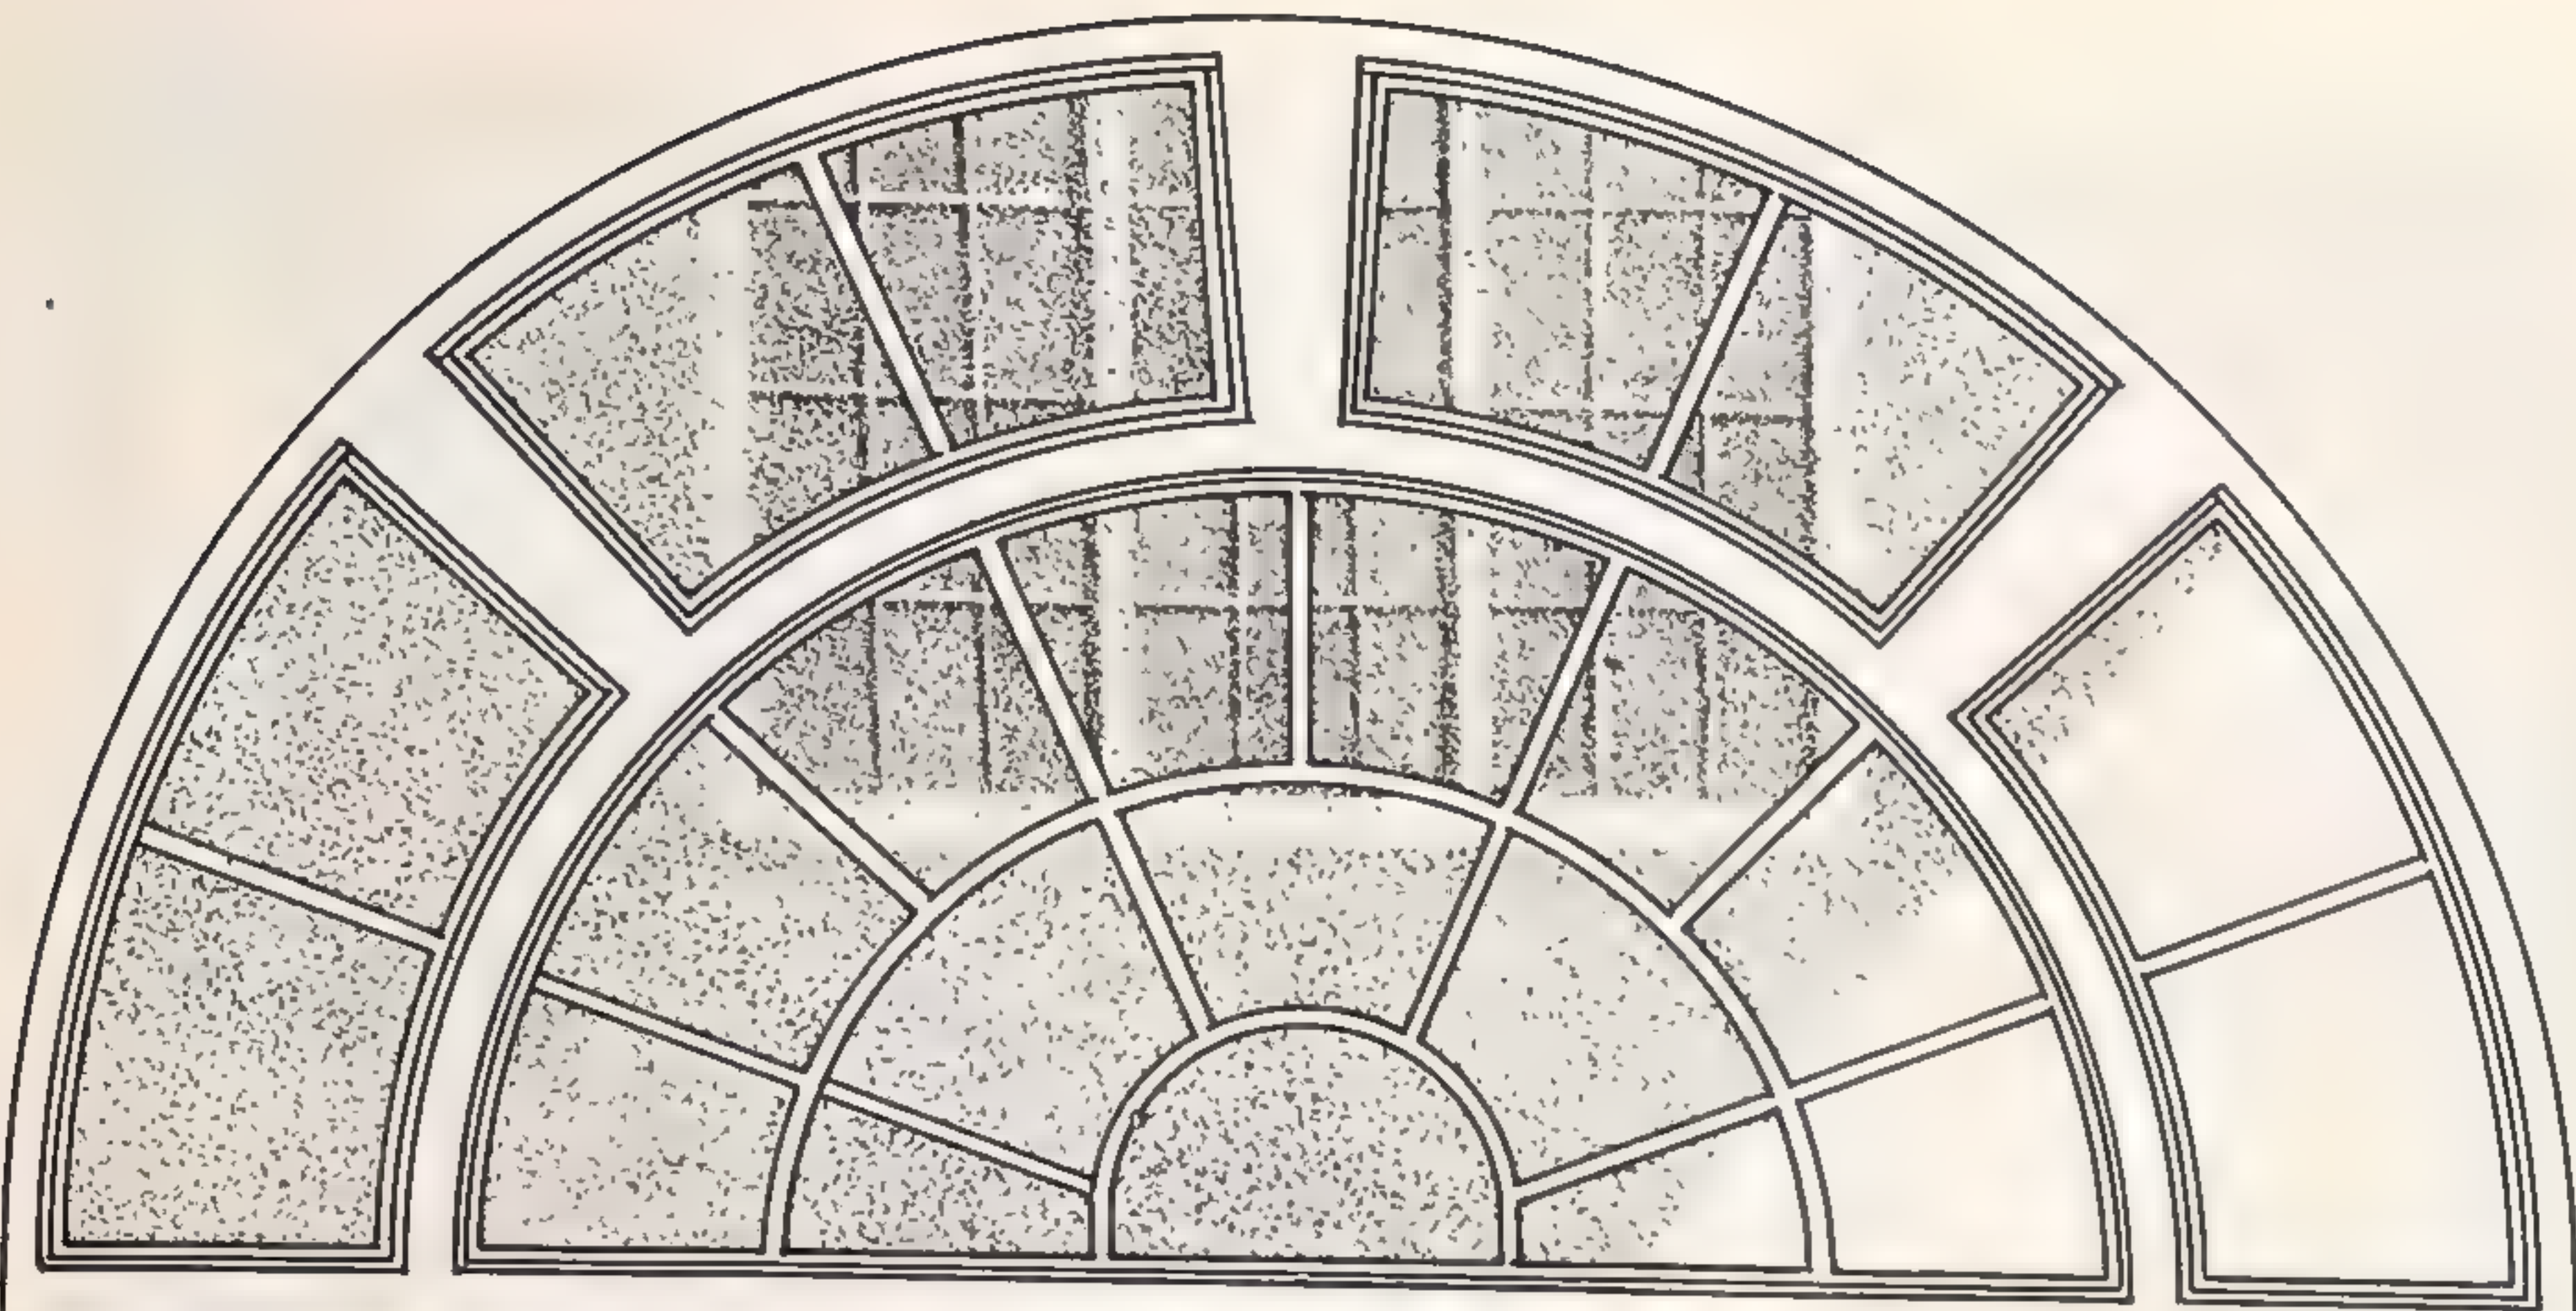

"It is discourteous to disregard the teacher's request for non-communication." This sentence, originated by Mrs. Young, is well known throughout the school. Culprits caught talking are forced to write this sentence on the blackboard a number of times. Mrs. Young has discovered that in time this punishment is a sure cure for talking.

Now the time has come when Mrs. Young's work in producing good citizens has come to a close. After years of teaching, she has become a member of the June Graduating Class of 1927. Every minute of her teaching career has been a pleasant one, according to Mrs. Young. She goes so far as to say that she has even enjoyed scolding her classes. Although Mrs. Young is retiring, she plans to lead a very active life in the future. She has been contemplating several interesting things to do next year.

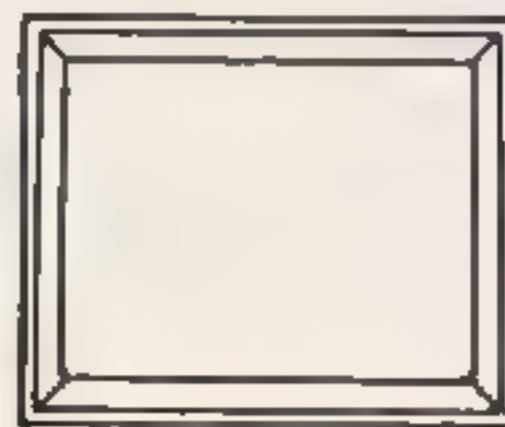

It is not often that a graduating class has the privilege of having such a wonderful character as Mrs. Young in its midst. We, of the June Graduating Class of 1927, extend to her the right hand of fellowship and solemnly promise always to keep the memory of our classmate and friend.

JUNE CLASS

June Class History

THE time for which we have so long waited is close at hand. Within a few short days we leave Central to enter new institutions of learning and to take up our work in new fields of endeavor. And now, as the anticipated hour slowly draws nearer, we find ourselves looking back with mingled feelings of sadness and joy: with sadness that we must part from Central, but with joy that we have been able to carry her colors so well during the four short years that we have represented her. But before we shift our last burden of responsibility to other shoulders let us look swiftly back over the years that will forever remain brightly in our memories.

Gazing into the past we first recall that memorable day in September, 1923, when we were welcomed for the first time by Principal Robert Maurer, who, we remember, was with us for only a short time before he was called to take up his work at Georgetown University. Mr. Maurer, loved by all who have been fortunate enough to have known him, has often returned to Central to take part in many activities of interest to the school. Mr. Kramer, who succeeded him, guided us safely through the remainder of our first year to a baseball championship and to a victory in the Competitive Drill, our first in six years.

As the days went on we perceived a new spirit growing within us—the spirit of Central which has been ever before us and which has urged us into our work with added enthusiasm and fervor. How loyally we supported our teams in the various activities, how we cheered Central's victories, and how we took her defeats to heart will never be forgotten.

Our second year found us thoroughly adapted to the ways of our school. Already representatives of our class were gaining prestige in the different lines of school work. With the city inter-high championship won, our basketball team repeated their performance of the previous year by finishing runner-up in the annual basketball tournament at the University of Pennsylvania. This, our second year, was further memorable, for it was during this period that we welcomed Mr. Alvin W. Miller, a man well-known to us all, as our principal. It has been under his guiding hand that most of our work for Central has been accomplished.

As the end of our sophomore year approached, we looked eagerly forward to the coming of the autumn when we would be Juniors at last! It seems only a few short months ago that we cheered Morty Wilner's championship football eleven, "the fightingest team Central ever had," through a wonderful season. With such a team as an inspiration, Central waved her colors proudly and triumphantly in many other fields of activity.

About this time our school gladly welcomed into her numerous organizations the Honor Society. Heretofore we had had many inducements to work for Central athletically and dramatically but now with membership in this national society as our goal we were urged to work equally hard scholastically. Quickly now our junior year passed and, after a victory in the Competitive Drill, our second in three years, we found our goal in sight. At this point we paused and looked back with pride on those years of success and with a renewed determination we decided to do our utmost toward making our last year a fitting and wonderful climax to those former years of endeavor. Our teams with classmates as captains have fought once more for Central. Our cadets have worked faithfully in upholding her name and have carried the dark blue-and-white proudly in all kinds of competition. Other school interests and organizations have worked as never before for Central. Our achievements in the classrooms have been of the highest order. And altogether, working as true Centralites should, our united efforts have brought several championships back to Central and have well upheld the honor of our School.

But nearer and nearer draws that hour which will find our under-graduate life ending, and which will see us joining the ranks of Central's ever-increasing alumni. And now as we close the record of those years that will be forever dear to us, let us leave one last wish for our school. May the history of this class forever uphold the glory and honor of Central in the years to come!

WILLIAM CROUCH.

June Class Poem

DREAMERS IN YOUTH

VENING in a garden. The mists cling about the hedges that deepen the shade. On the cool whiteness of a marble bench, the shadow-leaves, children of the moonlight, trace a wavering filigree. The strains of a violin enter the calm only to emphasize its stillness. Two figures linger in the veiled beauty and in the silence.

He—

The night for which all moons have filled and waned
Has come. The stirring year has decked the earth
In bold array.

She—

She ventures she is young:
Those saffron-gilded leaves that autumn bears
Are vain reminders of a summertide;
But now, the flowering year, so youthful, dares
Once more to fill the earth with beauty's grace.
What is a tree but rhythm caught and held
In green?

He—

Yet we, do we not venture much.
Oftimes—too much, as fearless as the year?
When on a mountain height, I soon forget
That all except my mind is bound to earth,
And try to grasp the clouds with arms outstretched.

She—

But far beneath the surfaced gaiety
Of spirited and heedless youth, there is
A fear, a hidden fear of what will be.
At seventeen, a courage and a faith
Impel us on. We dream, we hope, we view
The world and men with eager eyes of youth.
Though knowing that our hands can never feel
The moisture of those ever-changing clouds,
We still ascend the mountain way to near
The mist-bound crest we sense will not be ours.

He—

Yes, we are ardent travelers whose joy—
When first upon the sanded mountain path,
Exulting in an eagerness to breathe
The coolness of the air that veils the heights—
That innate joy, enchants all things it meets
With vigor and delight in living now
Which only youth can feel.

She—

And what of men,
Old, shabby, gray, forlorn? Uncertain steps
Cry out, "Defeat!" Young life once smiled on them
As ardently it smiles on us. They too
Had dreams and laughter free and gay;
They, too, were young, but now the world has cast
Them up and flung them down. They broken lie
Upon the unfeeling earth. What have they done?
Where have they failed? Is that to be the fate
Of dreams?

He—

It is the shade of failures stark
About us that we see; it is the dread
Of sharp defeat and bitter loss; it is
The first new knowledge, strange to youthful eyes,
That life is not all happiness; this forms
The unseen base of daring confidence.
The confidence of youth? Ah, no. Defiance
Rather is its name—Revolt of dreams
Against reality.

She—

And when we vow
That only boundless space shall curb the steps
We ever yearn to trace, and when the world
Smiles tolerantly saying, "They are young,"
It is not that we do not know that age
Brings stern reality, and life that hurts:
We do not care to think upon it yet.
We claim the only heritage of youth,
The right to dream, to laugh, to lift our hearts
In eagerness; the right to find the beauty
In a tree, a star that beckons, fields
That lie in evening calm.

He—

The right to dream
Although we know that dreams can break. The right
To climb, although we sense the pinnacle
Of happiness is here. And still we seek
Heights always hidden by the clinging clouds.

She—

As we ascend, our very song breathes hope:
What if we never gain those clouds of dreams?
What if the distant height no nearer seems?
We know the sweetness—as we onward strive—
Of yearning joy.....

He—

We are alive!

June Valedictory

THE SPIRIT OF ST. LOUIS has just wafted Lindbergh on his epoch-making flight. The Spirit of Central High School wafts us tonight even farther into unknown worlds. In this great airdrome of Central High School, after four years of study and experiment, our planes are clustering for their initial flight. The machinery is tested, the engines are humming, and we, the pilots, are ready. Yet a few hours more and these hangars will be empty. You will

"See the heavens filled with commerce, argosies of magic sails,"

And we, "the pilots of the purple" twilight, will fly "with costly bales."

In this airdrome we have gathered most of our precious freight. As we leave forever our loved training camp, memory and hope vie with each other to hold us under their spells. Memory exults in the years which have given us a portion in that student life which will never be duplicated, a life which has furnished experiences which will be forever a part of our garnered treasures. Hope, on the other hand, though questioning, stands quiveringly alert, eager for her own individual course, apart from all the others, in the inscrutable future.

Under the guidance of the officers of this training camp, we have had instilled into us, besides the mechanics of life, the need of high aims, firm purposes, and unselfish ambitions. If we have attained these, all the experiences of life will combine to steer the way to further achievement. As a guide in laying our courses, our instructors have given us the art of thinking, the power that rules the world. With it, we shall hope to take a part in the thrilling experiments and glorious results of the years to come.

In striving upward to higher things, we come to the realization that the training in our camp is but a beginning. Its main value to us is the habit of continuous application. For to what have our studies tended if not to the development of faculties which will improve upon the deeds of those who have gone before, and will apply more accurately and generously the laws of nature and humanity to everyday life. The best in art, literature and life is yet to be accomplished. Let us not keep past attainments as our ideals, for they are of worth only as the vantage-ground for greater achievement. Thus we may become messengers of the sky with the audacity, skill, and dauntless courage of Lindbergh.

As we have stored our cargo of knowledge and experience together, we have been drawn close until each seems a part of the other's life. All have shared alike in the absorption of high idealism. Yet now each plane eagerly awaits that signal towards which, for four long years, our eyes have been directed. Hope, courage, and high purpose fill our hearts. In the clouds we shall encounter grave responsibilities and duties. Central has prepared us to combat the cloud banks and adverse winds. Each little plane, the Spirit of Central High School in miniature, will dive and loop and soar until its own straight course is won and then sail on alone. Difference of thought and opinion, which lies on the outer edges of our lives and separates us but slightly now, will divide us more and more widely, and as time passes, the years of separation will gather between us as an ever-growing mist pierced only by a common memory and the light of a lasting affection.

Behind us we scatter the ashes of our school experiences within our airdrome, but we take with us the Spirit of Central High School, Tenax Propositi.

Now we—

*"Dip into the future, far as human eye can see,
See the vision of the world and all the wonder that will be."*

AS "YOU AND I" SAW THEM

The Junior Class

JUNIOR: A person younger than another in age or lower in standing.

We are inclined to disagree with the dictionary there; for, although the junior class is a year younger than the senior, its standing is almost as important in the school activities as that of its elders.

In the fall of 1924 there appeared at Central's doors a little group of enthusiastic "rookies," eager to learn what lay before them in the vast domains of high school. That enthusiasm has remained with them for over two years, and today the class of 1928 is actively engaged in sports, activities, and school organizations.

One of the first qualities acquired in our freshman year was a keen interest in sports. How proudly we purchased our first blue athletic tickets and proceeded to the stadium, there to behold the marvelous spectacle of a football game! Later in the year we thrilled with happiness in the victories of the championship basketball team.

One day we discovered posters all over the building, particularly in the chalk ledges, containing merely two words, "Stop Thief." After much speculation, some of us decided that this was a solemn warning to those students guilty of the grave offense of stealing chalk from the classrooms! However, we soon learned that these two magical words marked the advent of Central's annual Spring Play, and it was with undiluted joy that we witnessed our first Spring Play. A few fortunate freshmen were even allowed the bliss of acting as ushers and venders of refreshments. What satisfaction came from the realization that we, though only rookies, could really be of service to our school!

Our experience as freshmen was not complete until we had attended the Competitive Drill. There we first fully knew that overwhelming—shall I say emotion—known as Central spirit. It surged over us as we stood breathless in the stands, waiting for the Adjutant to turn, and permanently engulfed us when he turned to a Central company for second place.

The next fall we were back again, still eager, still enthusiastic, but not quite as "green." When it was announced that this was to be a "Banner Year for Central," we entered into the campaign with all our hearts, participating in activities where morning section permitted, and showing our school spirit by rooting at the game, where it did not. A championship in football filled us with pride, and increased in us the desire to glorify Central's Banner Year.

A few sophomores won their C's; others began to make themselves known in dramatics, publications, debate, and the like. The inauguration of the Central chapter of the National Honor Society influenced us toward striving for high standards in Scholarship, in order that we might some day be among the chosen few. Many of us took part in the Spring Play, "The Bluebird," and all joined in lauding the basketball team, which tied with Eastern for the championship.

But the crowning event of the year happened in the first week of June. We won the drill! This closed our Banner Year and left us, the sophomores, full of great ambitions, to be fulfilled in the next two years.

As juniors, the class of 1928, some seven hundred strong, forms an important part of the student body. Many of its members are at the head of school organizations, and almost all are participating in one or more activities. Basketball, swimming, debate, publications, and dramatics all have their share of juniors. In the last honor roll, the sixth semester headed the list.

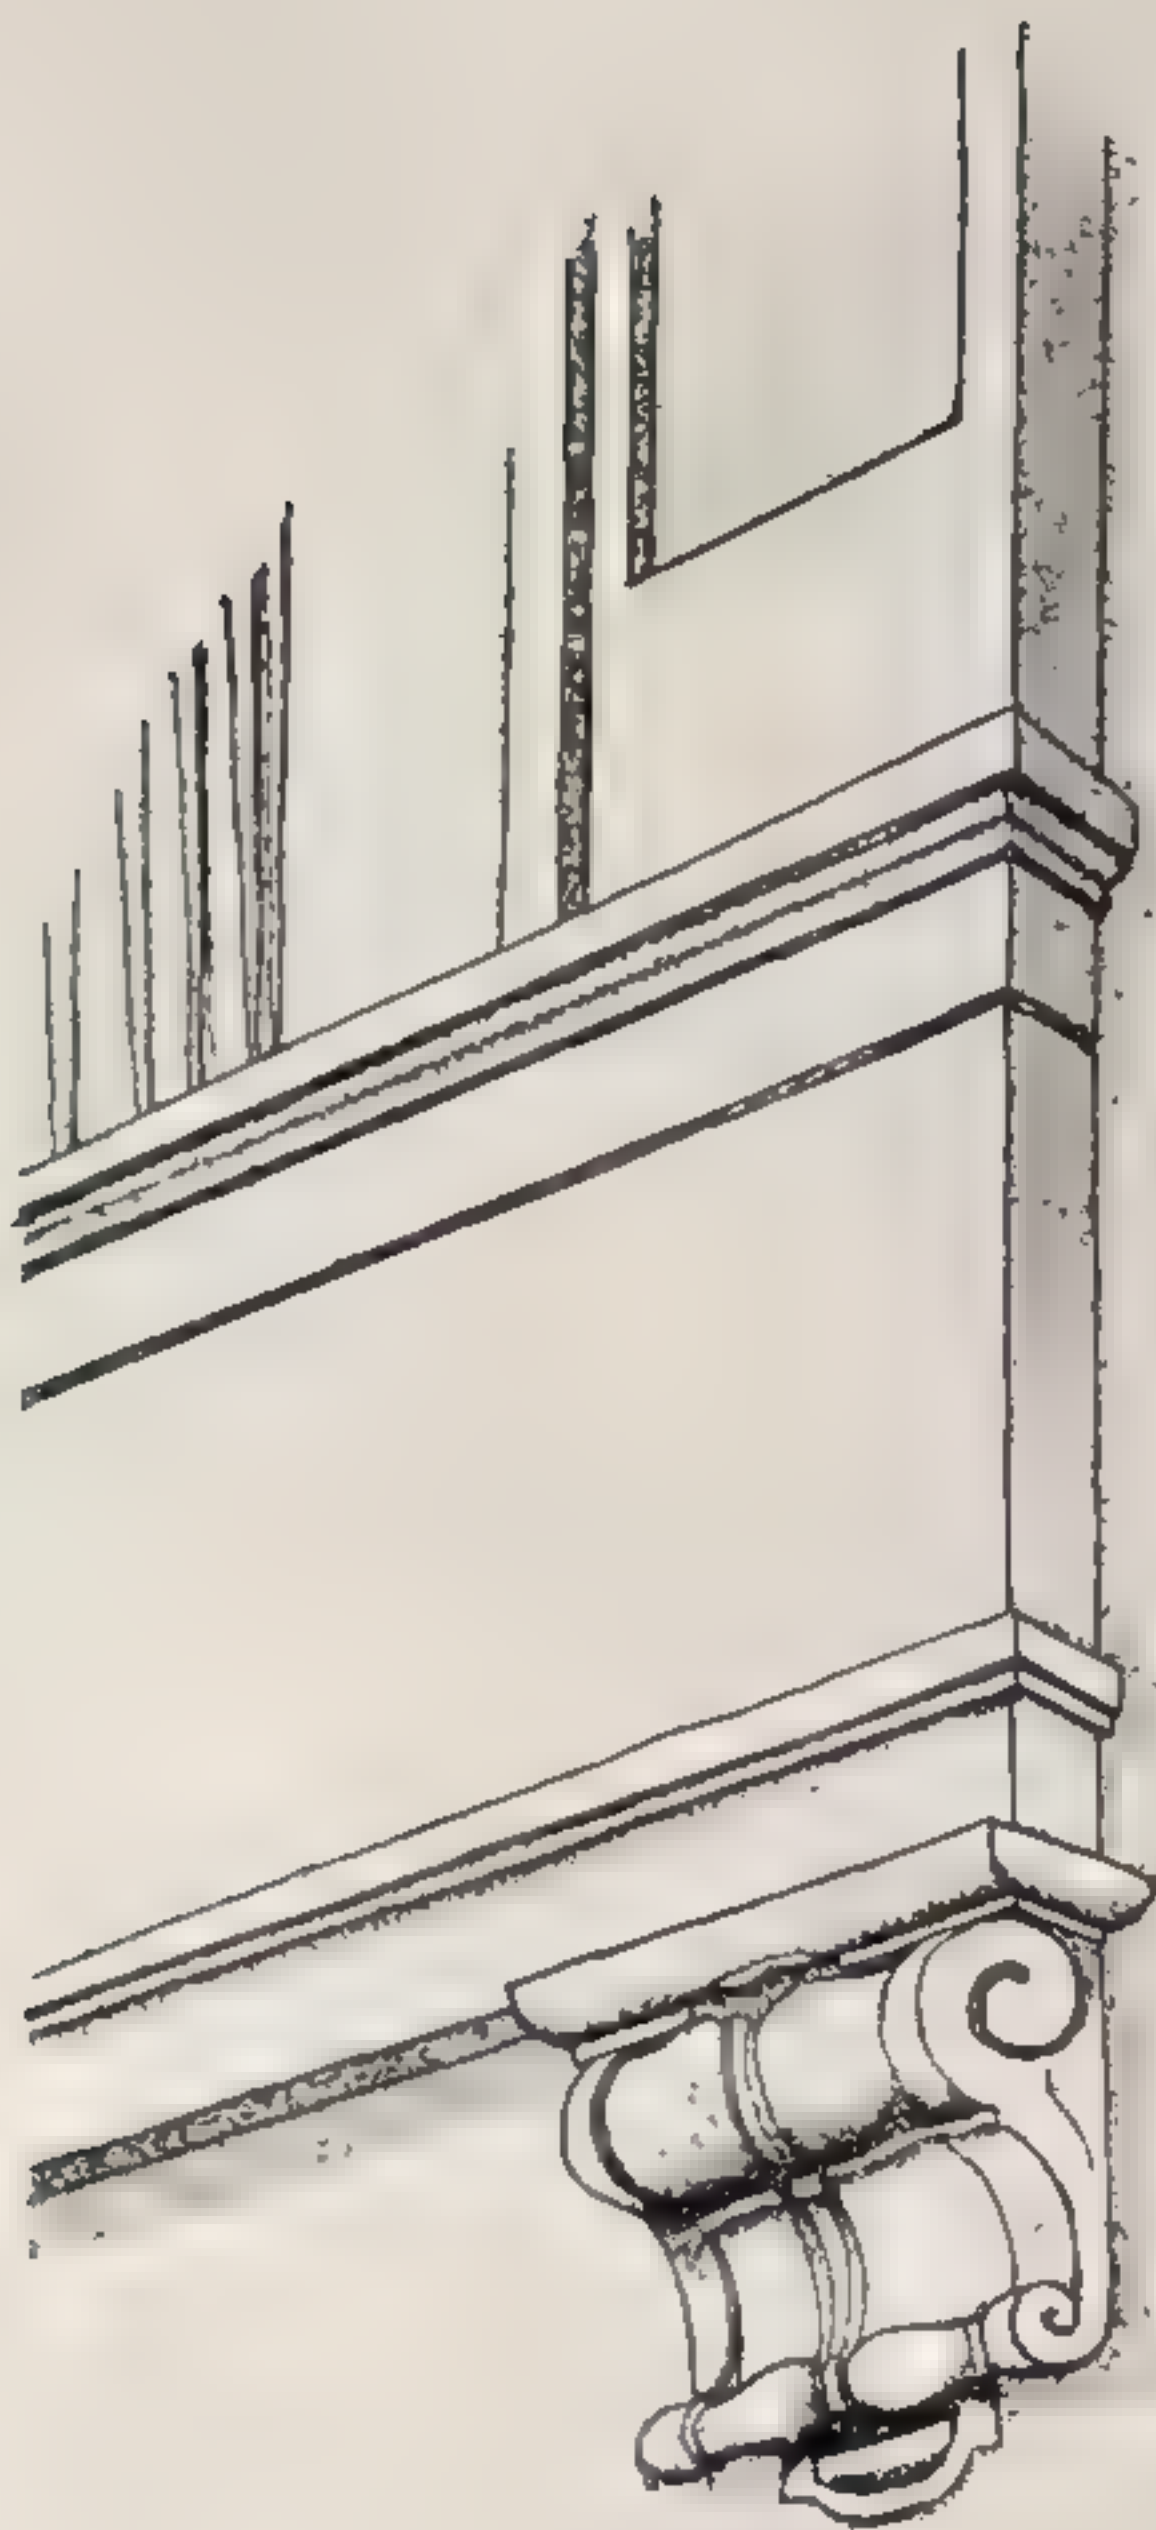

Recently the junior council cooperated with the senior council in a campaign against smoking, and in an organized drive to clean up the lunchroom. Everywhere in the school is felt the influence of the class of 1928.

Next autumn we shall return once more to the halls of Central, this time as seniors. On our shoulders will fall the mantle of responsibility bequeathed to us by the class of 1927. As we draw its folds about us, we shall look back upon the class of 1927, through the medium of the Brecky, and shall remember what it wrote into the history of Central. Then shall we strive to make our own contribution add as much to the glory of our school.

GWENDOLYN FOLSOM, CLASS OF 1928.

MEN NEEDED IN ELECTRICITY

Salaries of $12 to $30 a day not unusual

No profession offers greater opportunity today than Electricity. Salaries of $12 to $30 a day are not uncommon and the opportunity for advancement is unlimited.

For this is the Electrical Age. New uses for electricity are being discovered every year. The growth of Radio is simply one illustration of the progress that is yet to be made.

As Forrest Crissey said in "The Saturday Evening Post"—"The demand for electrical work is increasing immensely and electrical contractors assert that the supply of electrical workers cannot overtake the demand for several years to come."

READ WHAT EDISON RECOMMENDS

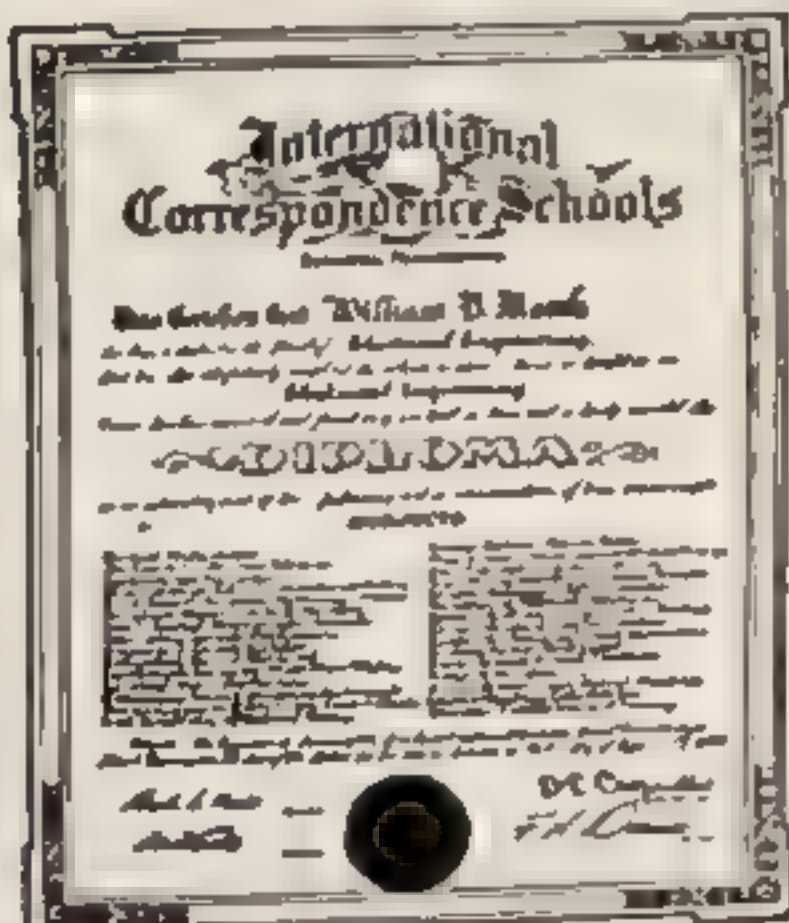

The electrical wizard says: "Sometimes fathers come to me or write to me about their sons and want to know if in view of the fact that so much of the field of work is already occupied by electricity I would recommend it as a career.

"Well, if I were beginning my career again I should ask no better field in which to work. The chances for big new electrical inventions are much greater than before the telegraph, the telephone, the electric light, and the electric motor were invented, while each of these things is far from perfect."

Now is the time to prepare for a good position in this profitable, interesting profession.

Best of all, you can study right at home in spare time through the International Correspondence Schools—just as so many other men have done. These courses are the most complete and authoritative courses ever offered—endorsed by both Thomas A. Edison and the late Dr. Charles P. Steinmetz.

You get this Diploma

Every student who is graduated from the Electrical Engineering Course of the International Correspondence Schools is given a diploma. This diploma is difficult to earn and its value is correspondingly high. It has been of inestimable value in helping men in all walks of life to secure good positions.

These well-known men helped to write the Course

EDGAR KNOWLTON—Electrical Engineer, Alternating Current Engineering Department, General Electric Co.
J. LESTER WOODBRIDGE, B.S. and M.E.—Chief Engineer of the Electric Storage Battery Co.
O. J. BUSHNELL—Superintendent of the Meter Department, Commonwealth Edison Co.

S. A. FLETCHER—Electrical Engineer, New Business Department, Alabama Power Co.
H. B. GRAB, A.B., M.E.—Engineer of Distribution, Commonwealth Edison Co., Chicago.
C. E. KNOX—Consulting Engineer on the Woolworth Building, New York. Author of "Electric Light Wiring."
G. E. PARHAM, M.E.—Electrical Engineer, General Electric Co.
G. F. BRACKEN, B.S.—General Inspector of Sub-stations, Commonwealth Edison Co.
ROBERT M. WILSON—Engineer of Apparatus Department, General Electric Co.
S. H. MORTENSON—Designer of Alternating Current Motors and Generators, Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co.

Just mark and mail the coupon printed below and full information about Electrical Engineering, Electric Lighting, Electric Wiring, Electric Railways, Radio or any other work of your choice will come to you by return mail. Today—not Tomorrow—is the day to make that all-important start toward success.

A French teacher fine is Professor Samson.
Does he ever use English to pupils?
Non, Non!
He chatters francais
In the jolliest way
And all of his students' accents are tres bon!

And this is our dear Lady Anne,
Who finds it her duty "to pan"
When meters don't beat
And feet do not meet,
And she says that a line like this one doesn't scan.

Here is a professor named Noyes,
Has a car that is not a Rolls-
Royce—
With the noise that it makes
And the Noyes that it takes
It scares all the girls and the boys.

Miss Luchs and Miss Scott pound the typewriter;
Miss Luchs is dark, Miss Scott is lighter—
And day after day,
Mr. Nelson doth say,
That they're both getting brighter and brighter.

He teaches us pieces, does
Mr. Sam Wood.
His vigilant eye sees that all boys are good.
When they're thick as to head,
Sarcasm, instead,
He's found makes them act
as good baritones should.

Mrs. Young is an obstinate person;
In spite of our tears and coercion;
When her picture we sought
She furnished us nought—
But said, "It's a waste of exertion."

There's a lady who holds a high station
In Central's foremost education.
When bad pupils talk
They use up the chalk
With "It is discourteous to disregard a teacher's request for non-communication."

GRADUATED!

With Distinction

CENTRAL'S CLASS OF 1927 passes on to the broader fields of higher education, and business as well as social life. Our wishes for their success join the many their relatives and friends are making.

ALTHOUGH your Electric Service has long ago graduated from the class of a luxury to that of a NECESSITY, its many broad fields of development will never allow it to have a FINAL graduation day. Today this service is used to light your way over the majority of Washington's streets—it moves the street cars which furnish you with the cheapest transportation—it is indispensable in industry and commerce—it is the most versatile as well as the cheapest commodity used in the home!

Its ever-widening use will always be met here with service of the highest standards at the lowest possible cost—through the

Consider Chemistry or Pharmacy for your professional career

THE High School Graduate about to decide upon his future career, should visit this College, inspect its most complete facilities, consider the splendid liberal education it offers, and confer with our officers regarding opportunities in the business and professional worlds open to our graduates.

Regular courses in Pharmacy, Chemistry, Bacteriology, Pharmacognosy, leading to recognized academic degrees, and many important special courses, qualify graduates for the highest and most responsible positions in industrial chemistry, in industrial or medical bacteriology, in the government service, in teaching, or in commercial work along pharmacognostic lines.

Features: Internationally known faculty. Twenty regular laboratory courses. Ample lecture rooms. Well equipped laboratories. Notable museum for research work. Extensive libraries. Botanical gardens. Limited enrollment affords each student a full measure of individual attention. Many student activities. Honor System.

Term begins September 22, 1927. Catalog ready.

Prospective students and parents are invited to inspect the College at any time.

New College Buildings in West Philadelphia are now under construction.

THE PUBLICATIONS STAFFS AT WORK

The Library

at last I can answer you. The frieze will have obtained its final degree of beauty by this summer, and those beautiful pictures portraying scenes of King Arthur's time will be finished.

Ten years have passed since I was first given a place in new Central. They have been ten profitable as well as enjoyable years. I have, perhaps, 4,000 more books now than I had in 1916. I have seen twenty classes enter Central, and after four happy years, graduate. I have enjoyed every class and can truthfully say I have no favorites. I have sent every class off with my heartiest congratulations and good wishes, and to this class of 1927 I wish to say the same. May you profit by your years spent here, and may you spend many and many another as happy.

JUDITH WOOD.

The Armory

don't know how to hold guns; I watch them grow, and, from year to year, develop into fine, straight soldiers. From private to captain, major or colonel. Yes, indeed, ma'am, boys are mighty fine. Boys are—"

I was rude enough to interrupt, but my anxiety warranted it.

"Do you think boys are degenerating?" We do hear so much about modern youth.

"Not a bit of it," the hearty voice assured me, "of course not. And nobody knows better than I. Why, I see boys, boys, boys all day long for weeks and weeks, and I ought to know. And boys today are no different from the old-timers. They're thoughtless, and some are lazy and some are wild, but there are just as many who will make real men as there ever were. My boys, anyway, make men."

A little ashamed of his own outburst, he was, perhaps—or maybe, a little out of breath. Anyway, the Armory fell into silence again.

"The drills," I ventured, "you see all of the inside—"

"Don't!"—I was the one interrupted this time—"Don't talk about them. It almost seems sacrilegious. They are too—too noble to talk about. The way those boys work would break your heart. The excitement and the thrills are all you people see, but I see the months and months of work. And, too, I see the heartbreak of the aftermath of the competitive drills. The boys come back here, tired and hot and ready to drop, and trying to be good losers. Oh, it's sad and touching, and yet there's something great about it. The bravery, the disappointment, the courage it takes to lose—all make men, I tell you."

I was writing feverishly—if the Armory only talked on—but, no! I had to prompt again.

"And the dances," I said, "do you enjoy them?"

"Oh, yes; I suppose I do. The music is a treat, and the girls' pretty dresses are a change from a steady diet of khaki and navy blue and gold buttons. Yes, I like the dances. I was glad when the library furniture began to wear out under the strain, and they decided to hold all the dances, except the big Proms, here. Naturally, I like the cadet dances best. The boys look so nice and straight in their uniforms, and the girls—"

"Oh, and the styles!" Why hadn't I thought of it before. "The styles must have been very interesting to watch for the last ten years. Tell me, what do you think?"

Here, at last, I would have a man's impersonal opinion; but I was doomed to disappointment.

"Well, you see," the gruff voice confessed, "I don't know anything about girls' clothes. I notice that most of the girls have cut off their hair, and some of them look like boys, but for style—well, I like the—the—oh, I don't know the names of the materials, but I like the, well, the fluffy—oh, you know—.” The masculine mind again.

“Don’t think I don’t like girls,” he apologized, “for I do.”

“I just guess I can’t see so well as I once did. This confounded bunting gets in my eyes.”

I tried another line.

“Well, at least you can hear. What do you think of modern jazz?”

“Oh, I like music, anything that goes. What I hear at the dances is all right. Of course, I admit sometimes there isn’t much tune to the pieces, but the youngsters don’t seem to mind, so why should I? You see it’s this way.” I listened eagerly; this man had sense. “You see, for the ten years I’ve been here, I guess the styles have changed considerably, and the music, too. But underneath it all there is the same thing—youth; and long skirts or short ones, waltzes or jazz, as long as there is laughter and the joy of teenhood, there’s bound to be happiness in the world. When you see the laughing faces of handsome boys, and hear the happy voices of pretty girls—so young and with all of life before them, it makes you—well, it—”

Some bunting must have blown into the Armory’s throat, for his voice sounded a little choked.

“Sometimes I wish I weren’t an Armory at all, but one of those fine, straight fellows with a pretty girl on my arm. Then, again, I don’t, for, if I were, I couldn’t see my boys. Here—” the voice changed into the gruff one I had first heard, “here you! That’s enough. I don’t know what’s the matter with me, talking so much. I don’t like it. Bad business—”

“Oh, yes,” I interrupted hastily, “but—”

I became aware of another presence in the Armory. I turned around and saw a uniformed boy. The first lieutenant of Company F he was; in classes he was always very polite to me and pleasant. But now there was a hostile look in his eyes—I was on hallowed ground.

“What,” he said, in the tone he must use to rear-rank privates, “do you want?”

This time, however, I did not flee. Masculine or not, military or not, he could not daunt me. I looked him in the eye, in the best cadet fashion, and answered calmly that he had nothing to do with my demands. Before his astonished eyes, I turned toward the highest flag, and said, “Thank you.” The flag moved a little, too, and there was not a breeze. I turned haughtily to this first lieutenant person and, I hope, froze him with, “I know something you don’t know.”

Clutching my precious interview, I walked, although I preferred to run, past the guns, out of the Armory, and through the dread officers’ lounge. When I was safely out, I said a prayer of thankfulness. Armories are no place for girls. As I contemplated on this fact, and leaned against the railing for breath, a deep voice spoke beside me. I looked—it was another cadet, only a private this time. He opened his mouth to speak, and so did I. I had learned my lesson.

“What,” we chorused together, “do you want?”

GWEN NORTON.

The Stage

Stage: No; I don’t need to. I just inspire my friends and let them hustle. They like me pretty well.

1st O. C.: (Snorting) Huh! They simply walk all over you.

Stage: I enjoy it. They’ve signed their names all over my scenery so when they reach Broadway I can say, “I knew them when——!” Nineteen twenty-six and twenty-seven, though, has been the climax, the most glorious year of my life. True, I was most unhappy at the beginning of the year because I lost my beloved Miss Sybil Baker, whom I knew so well, admired so greatly, and will miss forever. But soon my spirits brightened, because Miss Margaret Fishburn, whom I had long er—er—noticed, nay, had been intrigued by from afar, came to aid me in my inspiring work. Miss McColm and Miss Whitford, too, have been so kind and understanding. I think there is, in them, a true love of Drama.

2d O. C.: Hear! Hear! He knows the faculty, too.

Stage: And this year my children wrote their own Fall Show. How proud I was of them.

Organ: I liked the "Opening Chorus."

1st O. C.: I didn't like the "Russian Soul."

2d O. C.: Oh! I did. Why didn't you?

1st O. C.: I was terribly disappointed. I wanted to see the pig!

2d O. C.: Poor fellow! You have no artistic feelings.

Organ: Quite right. (To Stage) I enjoyed "Why Don't You, Jack"; and you looked so lovely in the cabaret scene.

Stage: Yes. You know the members of the stage crew are very, very good friends of mine. They dress me up and always——

Organ: (Interrupting) And always bang. Oh! what discords they do make! Their final work is quite harmonious, though.

Stage: Miss Heider and Miss Lent see to that.

1st O. C.: (as though reading the Society Columns of a newspaper) The stage was set by the stage crew. In one corner was a sofa constructed entirely of half and quarter rests. The chairs were composed of beaten time and counted measures. Little clusters of notes hung from the chandelier and filled everyone with an uncontrollable desire to finger them, and——

2d O. C.: Hush!

Organ: Yes. Please use the soft pedal.

Stage: Your playwright has certainly written too many lines for you (the 1st O. C. is at last apparently "squelched"). Speaking of stage sets, how did you like those in "You and I" this spring?

2d O. C.: I liked the attic and the window seat. Weren't Ricky and Ronny cute?

Organ: I enjoyed Nancy and Matey. They were so, so——

1st O. C.: (No longer "squelched") Full blown?

Organ: (Attempting to ignore him) So—— Now I've forgotten what I wanted to say.

Stage: You mean that they were so human, and real, and lovable.

Organ: How well you interpret the thoughts of others.

Stage: The interpretation of others' thoughts is my business, you know. Just think of all the plays I've sponsored in these last four years: Vaudeville shows, Christmas plays, Student-managed plays, and all sorts of entertainments. It makes me sad to realize that they're gone.

Organ: And you can't use "repeats" in your work, can you?

Stage: Not "repeats," but we always go on.

1st O. C.: (Sarcastically) Excelsior!

2d O. C.: (To Stage) Don't you ever get bored?

Stage: Bored? When I see new people created? Why, when I see fascinating men and women grow and live, I forget time itself.

Organ: You should never forget time. Oh, I beg your pardon; I meant musical time.

2d O. C.: Speaking of time, it's almost 7.30, and the seniors will be coming soon.

Stage: And I want to say "Good-bye and good luck" to every one of them. They have all helped me in some way, as stage crew, as orchestra, as the audience, and as my beloved Actor Friends (the Stage forgets his listeners and everyone except his Children of the Dramatic Association). Dear Actor Friends: I have forgotten my lines. I wanted to speak beautifully, theatrically, as I should, but I can not. Tonight I am only an unhappy fellow saying "Good-bye" to his dearest friends. We have been together, worked together, won together for four years. What shall I do without you? Tonight I blaze with the light of your glory. Tomorrow I shall be a dim old stage with memories. To forget you would be impossible. Try not to forget me. Keep my heart tightly bound with your joyous memories of Central, and then, perhaps, some day you'll wander back to find me hoping, waiting for my friends. And now—

“Good night! Good night! Parting is such sweet sorrow
That I shall say good night, till it be morrow.”

The Publication Office

Yes (exasperatedly), two lines and a pyramid.

(Later.)

(To Special Writer): Got that done? All right, give it to Miss Stallings to O. K.

The Headline Writer: Can't you use Mister in a head, Bits?

The Ed: No; of course not!

(The Headline Writer sighs deeply, rumples his hair, bites his pencil, rumples his hair some more, and subsides until—)

The Stenographer: Anything more to type?

(Great rise of voices, and stampede in which everybody is camouflaged in a mass of humanity and flying copy paper. When order is established, the typist is found stumbling under a load of manuscripts.)

The Faculty Adviser: No; this “Specks of Dust” will not do. You'll have to write another.

The Headline Writer (counting out loud): 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7½, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20½ units. Ogeegosh! That's too much.

(The Assistant Editor looks at the Other Assistant Editor, Little Ben, receives an inspiration, glances at her watch.)

The Assistant Editor: Where is the cop——

The Ed: Time to take the cop——

(Simultaneously.)

The Faculty Adviser: Isn't it time for the copy to go down to the printers?

The Ed: Yes; everybody get your copy ready.

The Assistant Editor: I'm ready to take the copy down.

The Ed (to Associates): Is this all your copy that is ready? Got that interview, all the editorials? Got the features? Got Mr. Miller's “do-jig,” his saying? Are all the ads here? All right (to The Assistant Editor), here it is. Good-bye! Don't lose that cut!

(Meanwhile the “gang” has thinned out, each leaving followed by a chorus of “Good-byes.” Soon only The Ed, The Faculty Adviser, The Associate Editors, The Other Assistant Editor, The Sports Editor, and The Specks of Dust Editor are left.)

The Ed: Gee, I'm hungry.

The Faculty Adviser: It's 5.30 o'clock. It's time to go.

The Janitor (sticking his head in doorway): You'll tend to the windows?

The Faculty Adviser: Yes. (To The Associate Editor) close the windows, please.

(A last minute scramble.)

The Ed: Is it raining? Where are my galoshes? Turn out the lights!

Chorus: Good-bye, everybody.

(And one more Bulletin is on its way.)

CURTAIN

The Lunch Room Corridor

"Well, I'll be!" ejaculated the second senior a few minutes later. "There's the bell, and I have to go to my locker. Where are you going?"

"I'm going to wait for some one. Don't forget tonight."

"Don't worry."

"Hello, Betty Ann," smiled the first senior a few minutes later.

The second senior laughed as he joined the deserted Will on the steps and went up with him. "Two hooked," he thought.
